INTRODUCTION

1. I was retained on behalf of Plaintiffs to evaluate the record and ascertain the significance, if any, of Defendants' activities from a marketing perspective. Specifically, I was tasked with evaluation of Defendants' marketing of prescription opioids. This Report provides a detailed summary of my findings.

QUALIFICATIONS

2. My name is Matthew Perri III. I am a Professor at the University of Georgia. I received my Bachelor of Science in Pharmacy from Temple University in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania in 1981. In 1985, I obtained my Doctor of Philosophy, with a dual concentration in Pharmacy and Marketing, from the University of South Carolina. I have held academic and administrative positions at the University of Georgia, College of Pharmacy, since 1985.
3. My current title is Professor and Associate Head of the Department of Clinical and Administrative Pharmacy at the College of Pharmacy. I am a member of the University's Graduate Faculty and Adjunct Faculty of Gerontology in the College of Public Health. I also serve as the Director of the Pharm D / MBA dual degree program, and I am an invited member of the University of Georgia Teaching Academy where the University's best teachers are recognized for their contributions to education.
4. At the University of Georgia, I teach graduate and undergraduate courses in health care and pharmaceutical marketing, management, research methods, patient communications, patient care skills laboratories, and biomedical statistics. Some of these courses attract students from the School of Public Health, the Terry College of Business, and the College of Education.
5. I have published articles in peer-reviewed journals such as Medical Care, Journal of Health Care Marketing, Health Marketing Quarterly, Value in Health, and the Journal of Health Communication. I have served as a peer-review referee for more than two dozen academic journals such as the Journal of Advertising, Clinical Therapeutics, Health Marketing Quarterly, the Journal of Health Care Marketing and Management, and Medical Care. I have also published articles written for health care professionals in professional publications such as Pharmaceutical Executive, Southern Medical Journal, Drug Store News, and The Consultant Pharmacist.

Report of Matthew Perri III in Case no. 17-OP-45004 (N.D. Ohio) and Case No. 18-OP-45090 (N.D. Ohio)
Confidential and Subject to Protective Order

6. I have made numerous presentations to audiences including academicians, researchers, industry professionals, policy makers, healthcare professionals, civic organizations, and consumer groups. Many of these were peer-reviewed or invited presentations. Recently, I was the invited keynote speaker at the Emory School of Medicine conference on Geriatrics where I spoke on strategies to help physicians understand pharmaceutical marketing.
7. I have authored two books, Pharmaceutical Marketing and Financial Analysis in Pharmacy Practice, as well as book chapters, and monographs on topics related to marketing, management, and clinical pharmacy care.
8. I have conducted extensive original research as principal, co-investigator, or consultant related to pharmaceutical marketing and related policy analyses, including work in the area of opioids funded by private and public sources, such as the National Institutes of Health the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration, private foundations, and State and Federal Government.
9. My current research includes two, multi-year grants from the National Institutes of Health (NIH) and the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA). The NIH grant investigates the effects of Medicaid prescription drug benefit program policy changes on patient outcomes, including death, in the Medicaid population. The SAMHSA grant is a training project which aims to provide skills to pharmacists, social workers, psychologists, and other health professionals to proactively recognize patients who may be at higher risk for health problems due to substance abuse.¹

10. I have been involved with various non-paid national and state service and consulting activities including, for example, my longstanding work with Georgia Medicaid,² service on the Boards of the Association for Marketing and Health Care Research and the Medical College of Georgia / Blue Cross Blue Shield Center for Healthcare Improvement, and service as a consultant to the Georgia Senate Committee on Cost Controls in State Funded Health Plans. I have been an invited participant to the National Consumers League workshop on direct-to-consumer prescription drug advertising, and to the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality/U.S. Food and Drug Administration “Think Tank” on current issues and future research agenda for the marketing and advertising of prescription medications.
11. I have also been a paid marketing consultant to organizations, including hospitals and long-term care facilities, independent marketing research companies, pharmacy organizations, pharmaceutical companies, and chain and independent pharmacies. My consulting activities have also included work with the U.S. Department of Justice, State Attorneys General, and private attorneys in litigation related to the marketing of pharmaceutical products.
12. Prior to becoming a registered pharmacist, I worked as a pharmaceutical sales representative for a multinational pharmaceutical company.³ I have been a registered pharmacist since 1981 and am currently licensed to practice pharmacy in Georgia and South Carolina. Since 2002, I have served as a part-time volunteer pharmacist at the Mercy Health Center, an independent, not-for-profit, comprehensive health center.

² I was a Board member (2001-2012) and Chair (2004-2010) of the Georgia Department of Community Health, Drug Utilization Review Board (DURB). I was reappointed to the DURB in October of 2018. The DURB, composed of pharmacists, prescribers, insurers, and patient advocates, is responsible for recommending the drugs listed on the State’s preferred drug list for all State-funded health plans.

³ In 1979 and 1980, I was a Pharmacy Student Sales Representative (PSSR) for the Dome Division of Miles Laboratories. In this position, I was trained and detailed a line of dermatological products to dermatologists, obstetricians, gynecologists, and general practitioners. Pharmacy distribution was also an important aspect of this position due to planned new product introductions and initial stocking needs. The PSSR program was a work-coop program, approved by Temple University School of Pharmacy and sponsored by Miles Pharmaceuticals.

METHODOLOGY

13. In my analysis of this case, I applied my education, training, and experience in teaching, research, consulting, and clinical pharmacy to formulate my opinions. My perspectives on pharmaceutical marketing are based on my marketing education and work in pharmaceutical marketing, including research, writing and publishing, consulting, teaching, and training of doctoral level graduate students, many of whom currently work in the pharmaceutical industry. I have subjected my research and conclusions regarding marketing issues to peer-review on numerous occasions.
14. I applied generally accepted principles of marketing, when I evaluated Defendants' internal marketing environment, the marketing mix variables (price, place, product, and promotion), and Defendants' marketing segmentation, targeting, and positioning strategies and tactics. Using this framework, I identified marketing behaviors and assessed the significance of these behaviors.
15. Case study methods, grounded in marketing principles, were used to systematically assemble and articulate information (data collection, analysis and interpretation⁴) related to Defendants' marketing activities. These methods are used and relied upon by experts in my field. In the present context, this case study is an in-depth, empirical inquiry into Defendants' marketing.
16. The case study approach is appropriate for this research for several reasons. Defendants' marketing must be examined in a real-world context to understand the practical aspects of it, and case study methods are ideal for this purpose.⁵ In addition, the case study methodology is

⁵ See e.g., related to the case study method, Gerring J. What Is a Case Study and What Is It Good For? American Political Science Review; May 2004; 98,2:341-354; Charles Schell, The Value of the Case Study as a Research Strategy, Manchester Business School, January 1992, available at: <http://finance-mba.com/Case%20Method.pdf>; Case Study Research Design and Methods, Second Edition, Robert K. also appropriate for this analysis because in most forms of research control over subjects is required and that is not possible here. Further, an extensive body of literature exists related to pharmaceutical marketing which provides a theoretical basis for explaining the impact of opioid marketing on the medical community. These considerations suggest and validate the use of a case study research methodology. Finally, the case study method is widely accepted and utilized for research in teaching, business and marketing applications, and within the medical community.⁶

17. In this case, I was asked to assess the significance, if any, of Defendants' marketing related to prescription opioids. This was the overarching research question and problem to be addressed in this case. In this regard, I was also asked to address the following supplemental questions:

- What is pharmaceutical marketing?
- What are the basic standards or rules, if any, that the companies which market prescription opioids should follow?
- What were the Defendants' marketing strategies with respect to prescription opioids?
- How were marketing strategies implemented and marketing messages disseminated by Defendants with respect to prescription opioids?
- What were Defendants' messages?

- What happened as a result of any opioid marketing?

18. Guided by marketing principles, the pharmaceutical marketing literature, and the research questions, I formulated propositions that were either supported or negated by the record (documents and testimony) creating data points. These data points were then linked to the study questions, interpreted in the context of both the case and the literature on pharmaceutical marketing. My commentary, findings, and conclusions are recorded in this Report.
19. In addition to the documents and testimony provided to me,⁷ I searched for and identified additional documents in the Relativity database that I considered or relied on in my analysis.⁸ A complete list of the materials relied on or considered is attached hereto as Schedule 3 to this Report. Specific documents that are used as examples to support my opinions are cited by Bates numbers. My opinions in this Report address Defendants' marketing activities and are stated to a reasonable degree of certainty in the field of pharmaceutical marketing.

COMPENSATION

20. I am being compensated at the rate of $350 per hour for my time related to this Report and a rate of $500 per hour for my time devoted to testimony. My curriculum vitae, which contains a list of my publications, is attached as Schedule 1. A list of cases in which I have testified in the previous four years is attached as Schedule 2.

⁸ It is my understanding that I have been provided all deposition testimony, to date, in this matter. A listing of the depositions provided to date is included in Schedule 3: Facts or Data Considered.

OPINIONS

I hold the following opinions in this matter:

Opinion 1: Marketing is the process of creating value for customers through exchange. (In this Report, I will refer to customers of the pharmaceutical industry as “Customers.”⁹ When referencing general marketing principles, I will employ the term “customer.”) Marketing is an integrated process of analysis, planning, implementation, and evaluation. Marketers analyze internal and external aspects of their businesses to identify opportunities in the marketplace. The marketers’ goal is to create satisfaction and value and to increase sales.

Opinion 2: Defendants¹⁰ are sophisticated marketers who are skilled in applying marketing strategy and tactics to successfully target and reach their desired Customers. This sophistication is seen in the pharmaceutical industry’s strategic orientation, Customer-focused philosophy, extensive Customer data, well-integrated marketing activities, and extensive internal marketing communication.

Opinion 3: Pharmaceutical marketing targets Customers to increase the number of prescriptions sold for marketed products.

Opinion 4: Marketing principles establish standards, regardless of the type of product marketed. Pharmaceutical marketers should adhere to heightened standards of responsibility when marketing medicine, including:

Report of Matthew Perri III in Case no. 17-OP-45004 (N.D. Ohio) and Case No. 18-OP-45090 (N.D. Ohio)
Confidential and Subject to Protective Order

- a. Pharmaceutical marketers should support and promote the safe use of medicines, putting patient safety before profit.
- b. Pharmaceutical marketing must always be truthful. A pharmaceutical marketer must never make a false or misleading statement to the medical community, other stakeholders, or the public.
- c. Pharmaceutical marketers must always accurately disclose information about the risks of their product, in addition to the benefits being marketed.
- d. Pharmaceutical marketing efforts should not be disguised as scientific or education.
- e. Pharmaceutical marketing should be based on good-science to provide an unbiased, non-commercial basis for the use of medication.
- f. Pharmaceutical marketers should be transparent about who or what they financially support.

Opinion 5: Defendants' marketing failed to adhere to industry standards in their marketing of opioids.¹¹

¹¹ The list of drugs at issue in this case are listed in Schedule 6: ARCOS Opioid Drugs and Defendant Corporate Groupings – Contacts, Wholesale Dollars, and Retail Extended Units and MMEs, 1993-2018, and Schedule 7: ARCOS Opioid Drugs – Contacts, Wholesale Dollars, and Retail Extended Units and MMEs, 1993-2018.

Note: while there is a technical distinction between opiates and opioids, I will refer to the entire class of drugs that are at issue in this case as "opioids." Generally, the term opioid describes all compounds that work at opioid receptors. The term opiate refers to the naturally occurring alkaloids in opium, which is harvested from the flowering poppy plant: morphine, thebaine, papaverine and codeine. Opioid drugs may be derived from the natural opiates such as heroin, hydrocodone and oxycodone, and these are sometimes referred to as semi-synthetic opioids. Fully synthetic opioids are created entirely in the laboratory, such as fentanyl and methadone.

Report of Matthew Perri III in Case no. 17-OP-45004 (N.D. Ohio) and Case No. 18-OP-45090 (N.D. Ohio)
Confidential and Subject to Protective Order

Opinion 6: Defendants executed their marketing strategy using similar marketing techniques and marketing messages. Marketing by the Defendants was consistent across Defendants in the message themes, and routes of communication with Customers:¹²

- a) Dependence, tolerance, addiction, and withdrawal should not be a concern in prescribing opioids.
- b) Opioids are effective for, and improve functioning in, patients taking them for long-term and chronic use.
- c) Opioids should be first-line therapy for pain.

Opinion 7: Through execution of Defendants' marketing, the market for prescription opioids expanded.

BASIS AND REASONS FOR OPINIONS

I. MARKETING AND PHARMACEUTICAL MARKETING

A. Principles of Marketing

The Marketing Process

21. Marketing is the process of creating value for customers through exchange.^{13 14} Marketers strive to illustrate the value of their products by communicating how those products can fulfill existing needs and wants to create demand for their products. If they are successful in creating demand for their product, they receive an exchange of money through sales. Value is a subjective evaluation made by customers, assessing how well the perceived benefits outweigh any

¹³ See e.g., Kotler, P and Armstrong, G. Principles of Marketing. 17th Ed. 2018, Pearson; Rollins, Brent L and Matthew Perri. Pharmaceutical Marketing. Jones & Bartlett Learning, 2014, p.4.

Report of Matthew Perri III in Case no. 17-OP-45004 (N.D. Ohio) and Case No. 18-OP-45090 (N.D. Ohio)

perceived risks of the product and deciding that, in the end, the product was worth the price paid (perceived costs).¹⁵ In exchange for value, customers provide sales revenue.

22. Marketing is an integrated process reflecting strategic and operational planning and implementation. (See Figure 1.) The starting point in marketing is to understand the company's mission and vision. Once formulated, marketers analyze internal and external aspects of their businesses to identify opportunities in the marketplace.¹⁶ The information developed from the pre-market analyses is used to segment and target customers, set marketing goals, and to develop marketing strategy. Marketing strategies are then implemented, and the results obtained are evaluated to provide feedback to the marketing planning process. The goal of the marketer is to solve customers' problems, create satisfaction and value, thus selling more product.¹⁷ ¹⁸ The documents and testimony reviewed in this case study examined each component of Defendants' marketing process, providing either support for or against propositions that ultimately describe Defendants' marketing behavior.

¹⁷ Marketers seek to satisfy a customer need and in doing so, solve customers' problems. When the product does a good job of solving customers' problems, it may represent a good value and provide customer satisfaction. I frequently use an analogy in my marketing teaching. With respect to electric drills, customers do not buy "drills," they buy holes. The hole is the solution to their problem which meets a need, if the price is reasonable it may represent a good value and ultimately satisfaction. Value is assessed subjectively and relates to the trade-off between how well the product worked and the price demanded. Defendants also recognized the need to solve customers' problems and the value proposition, see e.g., INSYS-MDL-008000539.

¹⁸ See e.g., Kotler, P and Armstrong, G. Principles of Marketing. 17th Ed. 2018, Pearson; Kotler P and Keller K. Marketing Management. Boston: Pearson, 2016, 692 pages.

Creating Value with the 4Ps

23. When creating value for customers, marketers make decisions that revolve around the basic principles, or cornerstones, of marketing: the product or what will be sold (product); its price (price); how and where it will be sold (place); and how customers will be informed and persuaded about the product (promotion). These principles are referred to by marketers as the four “Ps” (4Ps) of marketing or the “marketing mix” variables.¹⁹
24. Each marketing decision is tethered to one or more of the 4Ps of the marketing mix. Further, successful marketers manipulate all the Ps of the marketing mix in order to maximize the effect of their marketing program.

¹⁹ Some marketers like to consider additional Ps in the marketing mix, to include positioning, process (or packaging), and people. These product considerations are inherent to other marketing principles such as segmentation, targeting, and positions (discussed further infra) and are therefore included in the “mix” regardless of how they are classified. See e.g., Ahmad Kareh, Evolution of the Four Ps: Revisiting the Marketing Mix. Forbes. Jan 3, 2018. <https://www.forbes.com/sites/forbesagencycouncil/2018/01/03/evolution-of-the-four-ps-revisiting-the-marketing-mix/#9c823aa11200> (last accessed November 29, 2018); Brian Tracy, The 7Ps of Marketing. Entrepreneur, May 17, 2004. <https://www.entrepreneur.com/article/70824> (last accessed December 4, 2018).

Marketing Metrics

25. Marketers assess how well marketing is working using a variety of metrics such as sales, customer satisfaction, or less tangible metrics like brand loyalty or goodwill. Marketing metrics provide an additional input to the marketing process so that plans can be revised and adjusted to ensure the desired results are obtained.²⁰

Segmentation, Targeting, and Positioning

26. The 4Ps and target marketing, which includes segmentation, targeting, and positioning, provide the foundation upon which marketers build their programs and can be described as:

- Positioning: Creating a perception in the minds of customers.²¹ Positioning is critical to a product's success; the marketer's goal is for the product to be thought of first and favorably.²² To achieve this, the marketer informs customers about product features and how these features translate into customer benefits to create the desired position in customers' minds.
- Segmentation: It may be difficult for one set of marketing decisions (revolving around the 4Ps) to create value for all customers. Therefore, marketers seek groups of customers with similar needs (and wants) and group these customers together into market segments.²³ For each market segment, decisions can be made that will appeal to these groups (segments) of customers with homogeneous needs.
- Targeting: Marketers have multiple segments of customers that can be considered for marketing efforts. A market segment that is selected to be the focus of marketing

²¹ See e.g., Kotler and Armstrong, Part 1, Chapter 2.

²² Positioning statements are communicated in the marketing and tactical plans cited in this Report. These statements include goals such as "Become the first choice branded LAO in current and emerging customer segments." END00717275 p.21; Purdue positioned its OxyContin as "The one to start with, the one to stay with."

activities is considered a “target” customer. The selection of target customers and efforts to reach these customers is referred to as “targeting.”

27. The “science”²⁴ of marketing is complex and requires marketers to understand customers, what they need, and how they will react to marketing efforts.²⁵ While the basic principles of marketing lay a foundation, effective marketing also requires an understanding of psychology, consumer behavior, and the ability to adapt as products, customers, and the marketplace change.
28. Effective marketers understand and routinely employ the basic principles of marketing described above. Sophisticated marketers additionally have a clear strategic orientation, customer-oriented philosophy, ample information about their customers, a well-integrated company-wide marketing effort, and demonstrate excellent intra-organizational efficiency (e.g., communication, coordination) regarding the entire marketing effort.²⁶

B. Pharmaceutical Marketing

Why Pharmaceutical Marketing has a Heightened Standard

29. Pharmaceutical marketers rely on the same basic marketing principles as the marketers of other consumer goods, but pharmaceutical marketing has important differences, including:

²⁶ See e.g., Kotler P. From sales obsession to marketing effectiveness. Harvard Business Review, 1977: (Nov-Dec);67-75; Kotler P. Marketing Management: Analysis, Planning and Control. Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, 1988.

Report of Matthew Perri III in Case no. 17-OP-45004 (N.D. Ohio) and Case No. 18-OP-45090 (N.D. Ohio)

- Pharmaceutical marketing carries with it a heightened responsibility, because the “products” affect patient health and can be a matter of life and death.
- Prescription drugs carry with them risks that are as important as the benefits. This is especially true when the product being marketed is, by definition, dangerous to use, such as a Schedule II or Schedule III narcotic with serious side effects that can include addiction and death.^{27 28}
- The consumer (patient) who uses the product is not the person who selects the product; selection is made by a prescriber.
- Insurers, third party payers (TPPs), and pharmacy benefit managers (PBMs) influence the medication choices available to prescribers through formularies and preferred drug lists, which makes these stakeholders critically important to pharmaceutical marketers.
- Pharmaceutical marketers take advantage of the medical community’s reliance on scientific evidence by not only providing science-based messages directly through their marketing, but also through funding and sponsoring clinical research, clinical practice guidelines, and continuing medical education.

²⁸ CAH_MDL2804_02882791, composite document beginning with: Internet Pharmacy Data, Meeting with Cardinal Health, Inc. DEA Headquarters, August 22, 2005. This document produced by Cardinal health supports the proposition that Schedule II – V drugs warrant special consideration with respect to marketing. The document which cites from a 1943 legal case, Direct Sales Co. Inc. v United States, includes at p.77 (p.4 of the case) states: “But this is not to say that a seller of harmful restricted goods has license to sell in unlimited quantities, to stimulate such sales by all the high-pressure methods, legal if not always appropriate, in the sale of free commodities; and thereby bring about subversion of the other forms, which otherwise would protect him, and violation of the Act’s other restrictions. Such a view would assume that the market for opiates may be developed as any other market. But that is not true. Mass advertising and bargain counter discounts are not appropriate to commodities so surrounded with restrictions. They do not create new legal demand and new classes of legitimate patrons, as they do for sugar, tobacco and other free commodities. Beyond narrow limits, the normal legal market for opiates is not capable of being extended by such methods. The primary effect is rather to create black markets for dope and to increase illegal demand and consumption.”

- Direct-to-consumer (DTC) prescription drug marketing seeks to influence patient demand for a medication by increasing patient awareness and creating the belief in patients' minds that they have a "right" to be treated with a specific drug.
- The decision to choose a medication is complex and influenced by marketers, the prescribing decision-maker, environmental, and individual influences. (See Figure 2: Physician Prescribing - Information Processing Model).

Concerns with Opioid Marketing

30. While pharmaceutical marketing itself is different than other product marketing, marketing for highly addictive schedule II narcotics has additional concerns not found with other medications with less serious consequences. Renowned cardiologist and author, Dr. Isadore Rosenfeld (1927-2018), who came to be known as “America’s Doctor,”³⁰ often said in public interviews that all medicines contain a little bit of “poison” meaning all medications confer some risk in addition to their benefits. This axiom applies to all medicines, but especially to the most dangerous classes of medications, including narcotic prescription opioids.

31. Because of the potentially dangerous nature of pharmaceuticals, pharmaceutical marketers are expected to put patient welfare first when making marketing decisions about prescription medicines. This is especially true for products like prescription opioids which should be treated differently in marketing compared to other consumer products, or even other prescription drugs, because of their serious side effects and the potential for abuse and diversion.³¹ Given these concerns, Customers, including prescribers and formulary decision-makers (e.g., TPPs or PBMs), must have complete and accurate information to determine appropriate use.³²
32. Additionally, because prescription opioids may result in tolerance, dependence, and/or addiction, the overall “demand” for opioids is distorted by pharmaceutical marketing aimed at increasing the use of these drugs. I refer to this as a distortion because, whether due to tolerance, dependence, or addiction, some patients who use opioids require and/or seek more opioids over time. These properties of opioids may also stimulate some users to report successful treatment to prescribers due to a desire or need to keep taking the drug. Therefore, the use of the opioids can result in an increase in demand for opioids. This increase in demand effectively expands the overall market for these drugs – in addition to creating demand for the advertised product.³³

33. Pharmaceutical companies employ marketing because it helps to achieve the sales objectives created for their businesses and products. However, marketing in and of itself is a tool, and is therefore without conscience, ethical, or moral judgment. Thus, marketing strategies and tactics should be used carefully by individuals who must consider the appropriateness of their actions.

Standards that Apply to Pharmaceutical Marketing

34. In all pharmaceutical marketing activities, pharmaceutical marketers must comply with standards set by the government requiring them to work within their FDA approved labeling when communicating marketing messages to Customers. In addition to existing laws or guidelines, multiple organizations and associations from the U.S. and around the world have published guidelines, opinions, and ethical principles that should be voluntarily followed by pharmaceutical companies in order to overcome the challenge inherent to this industry: how to put patients first while still making a profit for shareholders.³⁴
35. Pharmaceutical companies seeking appropriate medication use should all agree that the goal is for medications to be used correctly and to provide maximum benefit to patients. Therefore, companies seeking appropriate medication use should follow basic standards, in addition to laws and guidelines in their marketing conduct, summarized in the following statements:^{35 36}

³³ Market expansion was a strategic goal of Defendants, see e.g., PPLPC016000255303, BDC meeting-Project Tango.

- Pharmaceutical marketers should support and promote the rational use of medicines, putting patient safety before profit.

- Pharmaceutical marketing must always be truthful. A pharmaceutical marketer must never make a false or misleading statement to the medical community, other stakeholders, or the public.
- Pharmaceutical marketers must always accurately disclose information about the risks of their drug, in addition to the benefits being marketed.
- Pharmaceutical marketing efforts should not be disguised as scientific or educational.
- Pharmaceutical marketing should be based on good science to provide an unbiased, non-commercial basis for the use of medication.
- Pharmaceutical marketers should be transparent about who or what they financially support.³⁷

Messages, strategies, and techniques used by pharmaceutical marketers must all comply with these basic propositions that describe the higher standard for pharmaceutical marketing conduct.

Defendants are Effective Pharmaceutical Marketers

36. I have reviewed an extensive record of documents and testimony related to each aspect of Defendants' marketing, reflecting an array of marketing efforts. It is my opinion that Defendants were sophisticated in their application of marketing principles and strategies to generate demand for their drugs. The documents I reviewed demonstrated a high level of customer-centric, strategic orientation, strategic planning, integration of marketing within their organizations, and extensive intra-organizational communication regarding marketing activities. In my opinion, Defendants were sophisticated in their application of proven marketing techniques to achieve their marketing goals.

³⁷ For example, who is paid to endorse their product, what research the company has funded, who has been paid to advocate for the product, etc.

Setting Pharmaceutical Marketing Strategies

37. A marketing plan is a comprehensive description of the full scope of marketing activities, or the road map, used to achieve sales and profits. Marketing plans identify strategies, set goals, and plan for the implementation and evaluation of marketing activities and are developed at multiple levels within the organization. Marketers base their plans on careful assessment of a company's strengths and weaknesses as well as the opportunities and threats (SWOT analysis) that exist within the business environment. This information is integrated with resource analysis and the assessment of market potential, to identify areas of business opportunity and to formulate corporate marketing objectives.
38. Once corporate direction has been established, marketers develop organization-wide marketing planning efforts. These efforts range from the highest-level plans where corporate level strategy is set, to regional, territory, and even individual level plans. The mid- and lower-level plans are more operational and focus on implementation. All marketing planning activities, when considered together, create a purposeful and strategic action plan that a company will use to achieve its desired results.

Pharmaceutical Marketing's Target Customers

39. Pharmaceutical marketers seek to drive the sales of prescription drugs by educating and persuading target Customers about the value of the marketer's drug. Target Customers include prescribers, payers (insurers, third party payers, pharmacy benefit managers), sites of care (e.g., institutions, long term care, retail, or surgery centers), and influencers (e.g. professional and patient advocacy groups, employers, thought leaders, or policy makers).³⁸ Physicians and other

prescribers are primary targets of pharmaceutical marketing efforts because patients cannot write prescriptions, and, generally, do not possess the technical knowledge to diagnose a medical condition and choose between alternative prescription medications.³⁹ However, the pharmaceutical industry does employ DTC promotions which encourage patients to ask their physician about drugs they have seen advertised.⁴⁰

40. Yet, for most drugs, pharmaceutical marketers target those who make decisions about which medications will be used by patients, namely, the prescribers, insurers, TTPs, PBMs, and formulary decision-makers.⁴¹ The record in this case certainly supports the proposition that & Marketing, PPLPC008000067059; 2003 Actiq Marketing Plan, TEVA_CHI_00042882; MoxDuo Launch Preparation, Actavis Inc., ACTAVIS0318876; Lombardo June 8, 2006 email with subject: FW: OxyContin Reimbursement Alert – Coventry Health Plan, PDD8800013331; Mallinckrodt-Wickline-007. 30300-Ohio Business Plan “Go Where You Can Grow”; ENDO-OPIOID_MDL-02344002 (Hospitals, LTC, ambulatory care, rehab, etc.) p.E0256.11; EN3288 Launch Plan, August 2009, ENDO-CHI_LIT-00018061.

³⁹ Other stakeholders who can impact prescribing may include, for example: drug utilization review board and pharmacy and therapeutics committee members, insurers and third-party payers, formulary managers, or pharmacy benefit managers.

Defendants planned and worked diligently with multiple target audiences, including TPPs and PBMs to ensure and maintain formulary coverage for the opioids they marketed.^{42 43}

41. Every target Customer requires accurate information to critically evaluate medication alternatives. Much of the information available to stakeholders is either provided by, or influenced by, pharmaceutical marketers who seek to control the information in the marketplace that will create the desired position for their drug(s) in Customers minds.^{44 45}
- However, if the information provided by pharmaceutical marketers is flawed (e.g., incomplete, biased, based on weak science), false, or misleading, patients are put at risk because drugs may not be used appropriately. While flawed information can still impact the prescribing process and generate sales, it violates the basic standards in pharmaceutical marketing set forth above.

⁴³ Formulary decision-makers do not select a drug for the patient, but they decide which drugs will be available through its formulary. Drugs that are not covered, or which have barriers to use (e.g., prior authorization) will be used less. This gives formulary decision-makers the ability to move market share, and drive or limit demand in a market.

⁴⁴ See also, e.g., Barrett Allergan Deposition p.257; Deen_Eshleman_Janssen Deposition p.139.

⁴⁵ Pharmaceutical marketers seek to carefully control the messages that are created and disseminated about their products. This is evidenced in the Defendants' extensive and detailed marketing plans cited in this Report. However, as noted in the adapted prescribing information processing model presented above, non-marketer-controlled information, such as a patient advocacy group or a media article, is also present in the market-place and can also impact information processing by physicians. Marketers seek to ensure that the information emanating from sources such as these are consistent with its own carefully developed and internally approved messages. The marketer's desire to exert control over this non-marketer-dominated information explains, in part, why companies support patient or disease advocacy groups.

Prescribers

42. Marketers frequently target prescribers who are most likely to prescribe their drug. Marketers identify prescribers using commercially available data, which groups prescribers, for example, into deciles (1-10) reflecting lower versus higher levels of prescribing. Marketers use this information to select prescribers, or groups of prescribers, as target Customers. Targeting high decile (more frequent prescribing) prescribers is consistent with marketing principles because it effectively targets Customers with potential to generate sales. Defendants used “deciles” to identify the best physicians for their PSRs to use in sales-call planning.^{46 47} For example, targeting high prescribers was seen at Janssen where the conversion of “Platinum” Customers to ⁴⁶ The Defendants use of decile marketing was extensive as seen in numerous marketing planning and other documents. 43. In addition to the use of deciles, Defendants also marketed to physicians in areas where opioid prescribing was already high, and where abuse was greater.⁵⁰ Targeting these high prescribers was key to Defendants ability to expand⁵¹ the opioid market. However, Mr. Barto, who worked for a time in Regulatory Affairs at Endo, noted with respect to the use of deciles in targeting prescribers, *“the goal was not to grow the market but to take market share.”*⁵² From a marketing perspective, market expansion and capturing share (market penetration) are not mutually exclusive goals.

44. Additional factors in targeting prescribers may include prescriber specialty, accessibility, or prescribing patterns such as previous use of a company’s drug(s) or individual characteristics.⁵³ To stay current on drug knowledge, prescribers need information. Marketers fill this need and Customers rely on the pharmaceutical industry to provide them with technical and science-based information that it is generally considered reliable.⁵⁴ Educational marketing efforts tap into the desire to make good decisions for patients that are based on reliable, valid, and unbiased information.
45. Indeed, pharmaceutical marketers take advantage of prescribers’ scientific orientation⁵⁵ and need for information by sponsoring and distributing research results through peer-reviewed

⁵³ An individual characteristic might include a thought leader, or key opinion leader. Other physicians rely on these kinds of peers as a source of influence on their own prescribing. publications.⁵⁶ Peer-reviewed publications are generally perceived as unbiased, good-science,⁵⁷ which prescribers' value because it gives them confidence in the information they are receiving. This confidence is diminished when prescribers learn that literature is not based on good-science or contains commercial bias. Bad science that impacts prescribing puts prescribers themselves at risk. As discussed in Section III below (Defendants' Marketing of Opioids), Defendants relied on materials that did not always meet the standards for good-science.

Third Party Payers

46. Third Party Payers (TPPs) cover, or pay for, the cost of drugs that are listed in their formulary or preferred drug list (PDL) for beneficiaries.⁵⁸ Formularies and PDLs are usually developed and maintained by pharmacy benefit managers (PBMs) who may work independently or in conjunction with pharmacy and therapeutics committees or drug utilization review committees.⁵⁹ Formulary development involves deciding which drugs will be covered and which will not. Generally, if a drug is not covered, its utilization will be low or non-existent.
47. Formularies and PDLs are used in conjunction with tools like prior authorization, step therapy, various hard and soft utilization edits, and preferred formulary status to purposefully drive utilization to desired levels within a prescription benefit plan.⁶⁰ These additional tools are under the control of the TPP or PBM, giving these decision-makers ways to direct demand toward or away from a manufacturer's drug. Through the formulary development process, TPPs and PBMs

⁵⁶ See e.g., Kadian 2005 Publication Plan, ACTAVIS0006930.

⁵⁸ A formulary is a listing of the drugs approved for plan member reimbursement under the TPPs plan. Open formularies include all drugs. Closed formularies include only the drugs approved by the TPP. A preferred drug list includes all drugs but provides preferential treatment to drugs selected by the TPP.

⁵⁹ Influential physicians, thought leaders, and KOLs may also be members of pharmacy and therapeutics or other formulary development committees.

⁶⁰ For example, a drug may be covered, but the PBM can restrict utilization by placing the drug on "prior authorization" (PA) requiring prescribers or pharmacies to obtain permission to use the drug. PA is seen by industry as a potent barrier to sales and, therefore, industry representatives will work to avoid PA restrictions being placed on their drugs.

have a significant ability to drive market share by supporting the use of or creating barriers to utilization of a manufacturer's drug(s).

48. Integral to the formulary development process is the role of the pharmaceutical manufacturer in providing accurate clinical or economic evidence to TPPs and PBMs. This evidence may include drug labeling and other relevant clinical or economic research that manufacturers believe will support the use of their drugs.⁶¹ Formulary developers may also seek other clinical information⁶² to make decisions about drug coverage.
49. However, pharmaceutical marketers also rely on relationship⁶³ building and other indirect ways to influence a drug's inclusion on a formulary. For example, a manufacturer can indirectly exert marketing pressure on formulary decisions by using key opinion leaders as advocates for a drug and by supporting advocacy groups who want to ensure access to a specific drug.⁶⁴ This can impact formulary decision-makers because these stakeholders also have customers (i.e., employers, state Medicaid, insurers) and must make decisions consistent with their customers' desires. Other commercial influences, such as public relations, lobbying efforts, or company-sponsored research can also indirectly influence formulary decisions. Indeed, research has

⁶³ Relationship marketing seeks to foster relationships with current or future customers by creating two-way dialog to meet the customer's needs, build customer loyalty and create an advocate (e.g., KOL or Thought Leader) for a brand. Relationship marketing helps ensure a positive experience with the brand and seeks to affect customer behavior.

⁶⁴ See e.g., documents like the 2012 Actavis MoxDuo Staffing Plan/SOW (ACTAVIS0316645) which describes a proposal to partner with the American Pain Society (or other relevant third-party group) to conduct research on the "Cutting Edge of Pain." This document describes numerous outreach activities that will be engaged including KOLs, news releases, advocacy "media" channels/e-newsletters/Twitter feeds, publication of "controlled" guest blogs, editorials, etc.; EN3288 Launch Plan August 25, 2009, ENDO-CHI_LIT-00018061 (KOLs). shown that adoption of new drugs is impacted by these kinds of commercial influences which can impact formulary decisions.⁶⁵

50. Pharmaceutical marketers rely on the fact that TPPs and PBMs need drug information to develop their formularies. Prescribers then rely on formularies, created in part with the pharmaceutical manufacturer's information, and its associated commercial influence when selecting a drug for a patient. Pharmaceutical companies who target TPPs and PBMs, therefore, have a strong influence on prescribing and a significant ability to drive a drug's market share.
51. When TPPs or PBMs do not give drugs' preferential status on a formulary or PDL, patients will have to pay more to access these drugs through higher copays or even bearing the full cost of the drug out-of-pocket. This creates a barrier to the use of medications which pharmaceutical marketers recognize.⁶⁶ Therefore, a common goal of the pharmaceutical marketer is to obtain preferential formulary position, without restrictions that would limit utilization.⁶⁷ When barriers exist, pharmaceutical marketers have responded with “coupons” and other strategies to reduce out-of-pocket costs to patients, thereby reducing or removing any barrier to utilization.⁶⁸

Others

52. In addition to prescribers and third-party payers, other important targets of pharmaceutical marketers include, for example, patients and caregivers, policy makers, academic and clinical researchers, sites of care (e.g., institutions, long term care, retail, or surgery centers), and influencers (e.g. professional and patient advocacy groups, or employers). Defendants’ marketing plans enumerate marketing efforts designed to reach each of these target markets.⁶⁹

Common Marketing Techniques Used to Influence Prescribing

53. Pharmaceutical marketing encompasses a wide range of methods that are effective in generating demand for prescription drugs.⁷⁰ With a focus on prescribers who appreciate science, pharmaceutical marketing works best when it appears to be based on good-science. Good-science is appealing to prescribers because it provides a seemingly unbiased, non-commercial basis for the use of medication. The desire to integrate marketing messages with science is the foundation of many of the marketing strategies used by the Defendants.

54. Pharmaceutical marketers' interest in physician decision-making has motivated research on the impact of promotion on physician beliefs, knowledge, and self-reported behavior.⁷¹ Avorn analyzed physician beliefs about the sources of influence on their prescribing. In this work, physicians were asked to report their beliefs about the pharmacologic effects of two classes of drugs where the scientific evidence had clearly shown little or no benefit while the manufacturers had advertised heavily to promote the drugs as superior to the therapeutic alternatives. Although the physicians reported that commercial sources of information had little influence on their prescribing habits, the majority held beliefs about the two classes of drugs that were consistent with the detailing message and at odds with the scientific evidence.⁷²
55. However, when asked, physicians deny that gifts and payments could influence their prescribing behavior.⁷³ In fact, receipt of gifts from the industry was associated with the belief that pharmaceutical representatives have no impact on prescribing behavior.⁷⁴ Further, there is also evidence that there is a correlation between financial relationships between doctors and drug companies: greater payments relating to higher volumes of the brand name drugs being prescribed.⁷⁵

56. For example, Hadland et al. (2018) examined the association between pharmaceutical industry marketing of opioids and subsequent physician opioid prescribing behavior. This research, using the Open Payments and Medicare Part D Opioid Prescriber Summary File, analyzed the extent to which pharmaceutical industry marketing of opioids to physicians during 2014 was associated with opioid prescribing behavior during 2015. The results indicated that “receipt of any opioid-related payments from industry in 2014 was associated with 9.3% (95% CI, 8.7%-9.9%) more opioid claims in 2015 compared with physicians who received no such payments...” (p. 862). Hadland also investigated the impact of industry meals provided to physicians finding that “each additional meal was associated with an increase of 0.7% (95% CI, 0.6%-0.8%) in opioid claims.”⁷⁶
57. Other research has supported the growing concerns over payments from drug makers to prescribers.^{77 78} This body of literature suggests that regardless of what prescribers may think about their decision-making, and the inputs to the decision-making process, the role of the pharmaceutical marketer significantly impacts their prescribing.⁷⁹

Personal Selling

58. Prescribers need to continually educate themselves about drugs to determine which are best. They therefore rely on pharmaceutical companies as a source of needed drug information.⁸⁰ Pharmaceutical companies use pharmaceutical sales representatives (PSRs) to provide information to prescribers and to generate prescriptions.⁸¹ In fact, personal selling, also referred to as product detailing, through PSRs and medical science liaisons (MSLs), is effective and consistently accounts for more than half of all pharmaceutical marketing expenditures industry-

wide.^{82 83 84} PSRs generally create notes, referred to as “call notes,” that may partially document a PSRs interaction with Customers.⁸⁵

59. Defendants’ marketing recognized the value of personal selling. For example, in a marketing presentation at ENDO, prepared by ZS Associates (a commercial marketing research and support company), it was noted with respect to the pain portfolio, *“Sales force detailing is the most impactful tactic, detailing accounts for ~35-65% of all sales and marketing impact.”*⁸⁶ Further recognizing the need and value for personal selling efforts in order to maintain sales, Janssen contracted with Quintiles for approximately $24 million ($12 million per year for two years) when its Nucynta IR and ER sales force were transitioned to other drugs.⁸⁷
60. MSLs, while not classified as sales personnel, contribute to sales effectiveness through their contributions to marketing intelligence as well as Customer education. For example, Allergan

MSLs collected marketing intelligence at an American Pain Society meeting focused on the potential dangers of opioid use.⁸⁸ Ms. Barrett, who was for a time a Medical Affairs employee at Allergan, stated that MSLs “...always go with a purpose for covering the pain society meetings. So it’s an opportunity to understand cutting edge science. It’s an opportunity to understand what’s going on with competitors, treatment paradigms, guidelines, all those kinds of things.”⁸⁹

61. Personal selling is one of the most powerful and widely used pharmaceutical marketing techniques. Defendants’ marketing documents and the research and practical literature support this proposition.^{90 91} Personal selling is effective because it utilizes both information and “relationship building” to communicate with, educate, and influence the prescriber.⁹² Further, sales personnel can directly provide promotional materials that reinforce sales messages even after a sales call.⁹³ However, recipients of marketing materials provided by pharmaceutical companies should use this information for medical decision-making carefully as it is may not always be accurate.^{94 95}

62. Finally, personal selling and relationships in marketing are complex and physicians are reluctant to acknowledge the impact that personal selling and other forms of pharmaceutical promotion may have on their prescribing practices.⁹⁶ Indeed, physicians may not be able to easily discriminate between promotional information and scientific evidence⁹⁷ and further believe that their colleagues are more susceptible to industry influences than themselves.⁹⁸
63. Yet, prescribers need accurate drug information to take good care of their patients. When there is an information need, a virtual army of PSRs stands ready to step in and provide the information and messages created by their companies. The information and education provided by PSRs is marketing. Marketing at its core has the goal of increasing product awareness and knowledge by providing information to customers. This information educates customers, but is marketing, nevertheless. Manufacturers, including Defendants which compensated PSRs based on incentives, confirm this by attaching financial rewards to the education PSRs provide and the outcomes of that education: prescription sales.⁹⁹

Research, Publications & Medical Journal Advertising

64. Medical journals are useful to the pharmaceutical marketer because they contain published research and advertising. Peer-reviewed publications are generally considered to be unbiased and reliable sources of information, and physicians rely on the conclusions of research studies to make decisions for their patients. Azoulay investigated the impact of both pharmaceutical company promotional efforts and scientific publications on prescribing behavior for anti-ulcer drugs and found a significant effect on sales for both types of communication.¹⁰⁰ This preference for science-based information is foundational to many of the Defendants' pharmaceutical marketing activities identified in this Report.
65. However, the ever-increasing volume of research and publications may contain commercial bias because of the prevalence of company-sponsored¹⁰¹ research for the drug under evaluation.¹⁰² Even so, peer-reviewed research, with appropriate disclosures of funding sources and investigators' potential conflicts of interest, may still be perceived by prescribers as unbiased. When commercial interests are not disclosed or are disguised, and conflicts are perceived or are discovered, the credibility of the information in the publication is diminished.¹⁰⁴

¹⁰¹ Company sponsored research can include financial or other support provided in the conduct of research or in the publication process. This would include, for example, research funding, study protocol development (research design, clinical endpoints, study period, etc.), writing assistance, payments to investigators who may also be KOLs or provide other paid consulting services (e.g., CME talks) to companies.

66. Pharmaceutical marketers also advertise in medical journals, alongside peer-reviewed research.¹⁰⁵ This advertising works because when prescribers are reading medical journals and the research contained therein, they also see promotional, company-sponsored advertisements. The presence of advertisements, alongside credible research tends to lend credibility to the advertisements, making them more effective.¹⁰⁶

Peer-to-Peer Marketing

67. A core marketing principle is opinion leadership, because people listen to others whom they believe have greater knowledge and experience about a subject. A significant driver of a physician's view of a drug is how the drug is perceived by peer-physicians, making "opinion leadership" or "peer-to-peer" marketing an effective sales technique. Peer-to-peer marketing uses key opinion leaders (KOLs) or "influencers" and word-of-mouth to create an expanding awareness and more rapid adoption of new pharmaceuticals by prescribers and other stakeholders. Using KOLs can legitimize marketing messages, increase product awareness, and convey favorable impressions and experience with a drug.¹⁰⁷ Mr. Bingol, a Senior Marketing Director at Endo, explained the benefit of using KOLs:¹⁰⁸

Q. Okay. Next bullet point discusses engage KOL to legitimize messages. Is that a reference to what we discussed earlier in terms of your use of KOLs in connection with the promotion of Opana ER?

MR. LIMBACHER: Object to form.

A. Using KOLs as thought leaders -- they had a broad network and a broad following, and if they were -- as they work with you, it brings more credibility to the message.

Q. (By Ms. Scullion) So that could help legitimize the message that Endo wanted to send to the market about Opana ER, for example?

A. It would help legitimize the need and the utility of our product in those appropriate patients.

Q. It would also help legitimize the message; correct?

MR. LIMBACHER: Object to form

A. That is the message, that for patients who are undertreated or not be able to get the pain relief they made with the adverse event profile they might be able to tolerate, that there's another option.

68. Another benefit of peer-to-peer marketing is the expansion of the marketer's "reach." Because some physicians refuse to see PSRs, peer-to-peer marketing enables manufacturers to pass messages along to these physicians who may not be reachable via personal selling. Further, peer-to-peer networks increase efficiency and return on investment (ROI) when used synergistically with the sales call, as targeted prescribers are reached via both the sales encounter and through social and professional networks.¹⁰⁹ Similarly, some companies have employed the use of industry advisory boards, bringing KOLs and others together to discuss drug issues, the marketplace and individual experiences.¹¹⁰ By engaging KOLs, manufacturers tap into a critical antecedent for a prescription drug: the experience of peers and the confidence this brings to the decision process. As Endo co-founder and former CEO Carol Ammon explained, "thought leaders" "would not only talk about [a company's] products but would really start to move the whole market towards a change in pain management."¹¹¹ However, because KOLs are cultivated by pharmaceutical companies interested in advancing their drugs, the objectivity of KOLs may be questioned.^{112 113 114} pharmaceutical manufacturer can glean significant market information, learn how its' drug is perceived in the medical community, and identify new strengths, weaknesses, opportunities, or threats. It also provides the opportunity for KOLs to exchange information that could impact their own prescribing practices. In sum, KOLs are used to "infect" other prescribers with favorable opinions regarding a company's drug.¹¹⁵

70. An extension of peer-to-peer marketing is the use of health advocacy groups, which often provide national level thought and policy leadership related to disease and treatments.

Defendants were able to more widely disseminate their marketing messages, which had the added benefit of appearing to be unbiased, by supporting and influencing such advocacy groups.¹¹⁶ This included the pain market in Ohio, which for Janssen was the second largest

Nucynta state account in the U.S.¹¹⁷ Groups such as the American Pain Society, which advocated “Pain as the Fifth Vital Sign,”¹¹⁸ sought to elevate awareness of pain and its treatment – a goal that is consistent with Defendants’ marketing.^{119 120 121}

71. Other groups such as, for example, the American Academy of Pain Medicine (AAPM), American Geriatrics Society, and the American Pain Foundation all worked to increase the awareness of and access to pain treatment.¹²² In 1997, APS and AAPM issued a Consensus Statement that ¹¹⁸ The American Academy of Pain Medicine (“AAPM”) and the American Pain Society (“APS”) are professional medical societies, each of which received funding from Defendants. In about 1996, the APS Trademarked “Pain is the 5th Vital Sign” advocating to elevate pain to the “fifth vital sign,” along with temperature, pulse, respiration rate, and blood pressure. The binder also cites The Fifth Vital Sign as a trademark of the APS (p. 39 of 86 of the PDF)).

¹²¹ Mr. Bingol at Endo regarded the “tag line” of “pain as the fifth vital sign” as an opportunity on a “market-wide” basis. Bingol, Demir_Endo Deposition, pp.225-226. This supports the proposition that the marketing messages seen in this case benefited not only the company that initiated the message, but also other competitors.

endorsed opioids to treat chronic pain and claimed, among other things, that pain is often managed inadequately and that commonly held assumptions about opioids need modification with respect to addiction, respiratory depression and other side effects, tolerance and diversion.¹²³ In 2001, AAPM disseminated a press release regarding diversion and abuse of controlled substances, which included the statement:¹²⁴

“Experience and investigation have shown that when opioids are prescribed and used appropriately in the treatment of pain there is minimal danger of creating an addictive disorder. Evidence to date indicates that substance abuse problems have not increased as a result of the increased availability of therapeutic opioids. The public health problem represented by misuse of prescription opioids is miniscule in comparison with that of untreated and unrelenting pain.”

This press release expresses opinions that effectively minimized concerns over diversion and abuse. This and other positions held by advocacy groups which were consistent with Defendants’ marketing messages, when considered with Defendants’ support of these advocacy groups, supports the proposition that Defendants’ financial support had marketing purpose.¹²⁵

72. Advocacy support by Defendants also was extended to groups like the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals (JCAHO) and the Federation of State Medical Boards (FSMB) both of which distributed guidelines or standards for opioid use.¹²⁶ In some instances, Defendants’ support went beyond financial support aimed at influencing messages and included direct contributions or edits to advocacy messages. For example, Dr. Haddox provided comments and edits to the Pain Action Pamphlet distributed by the American Pain Foundation¹²⁷ and Responsible Opioid Prescribing (FSMB).¹²⁸

73. Further support for the proposition that Defendants used KOLs, peer-to-peer marketing, and advocacy groups to reach marketing goals is seen in interactions with Dr. Portenoy. Dr. Portenoy, a well-known and outspoken KOL, was an important component of the Defendants' influence with advocacy groups. His work with industry, and advocacy groups supported by industry, culminated in dissemination of the industry supported messages Defendants wanted communicated in the marketplace. These messages were consistent with Defendants' promotional marketing messages and had the marketing purpose of creating more favorable perceptions about opioids, removing barriers to opioid use, and stimulating sales.¹²⁹
74. Ms. Pamela Bennett, who worked for the American Pain Foundation as a consultant and was hired by Purdue in 2001, worked to create an advocacy "army" to support Purdue's sales¹³⁰ and its desire to disseminate new paradigms about opioids in the marketplace.¹³¹ Working under the title of Advocacy Director, Ms. Bennett worked to create the Pain Control Advocacy Toolkit which had the goal of providing “...patients, their healthcare providers, their caregivers, and other advocates simple tools to express a strong, organized voice in the media and powerful governmental circles –tools that will help ensure the case for pain management will be heard and access to appropriate treatment will be rapidly improved.”¹³² The toolkit provided specific training for its intended audiences on issues including, why advocacy is important (and who it should come from), to various talking points, how to get messages out, rules for talking with reporters, key audiences, how to use a press kit, and other key issues. Training on how to talk with reporters included, for example, the advice to not repeat negative remarks in reporters’ questions. It offers the advice, that if a reporter asks a question such as, “Is an addiction to painkillers the issue here?”, the respondent should offer, “No, the real issue is whether appropriate therapy for thousands of patients is being threatened by criminals and chronic abusers.” Reframing the issue from addiction to blaming the problem on criminals and chronic abusers was consistent with Purdue’s desire to reshape how Customers thought about opioids.¹³³ While Ms. Bennett did not characterize these activities as marketing, the use of opinion leadership by Purdue and other Defendants in this fashion, is marketing.¹³⁴

75. Defendants’ support of advocacy groups was significant.¹³⁵ This monetary support, as with KOLs, created an unavoidable conflict of interest, calling into question the independence of advocacy organizations. As described in this Report, working with these groups was an integral part of Defendants’ marketing. However, Ms. Deem-Eshleman, a marketing professional who worked on the Nucynta brand and was a corporate representative for Janssen, indicated the company worked with but did not promote its products through outside organizations such as, for example, the American Pain Foundation, the American Academy of Pain Management, or the American Academy of Pain Medicine. In her testimony, Ms. Deem-Eshleman relied on semantics to support her characterization of Janssen's involvement with these groups, referring to some of this involvement as "unbranded" marketing.¹³⁶ From a marketing perspective, Janssen's work with advocacy, referred to as outside organizations in this context, supports the proposition that Janssen marketed through these organizations.

¹³⁴ In her deposition, Ms. Bennett was asked: “Do you think that deploying advocates from your army into a state like Ohio to offer statements in response to an article that’s going to be published in a local paper about OxyContin abuse – do you think that is marketing? Her response was, “I think – well, no.” She went on to say, “I think it—I think it’s offering people an opportunity to express their opinion.” While the action of expressing opinions may or may not be marketing, Purdue’s coordination of the process to ensure, and influence exerted, over the opinions expressed, is marketing. (Bennett P 011619 Deposition, pp.262-263.)

Continuing Medical Education (CME)

76. Pharmaceutical companies support educational efforts and routinely refer to their marketing as education.¹³⁷ This includes accredited CME and non-certified education.¹³⁸ However, accredited CME and non-certified education have distinct differences. Accredited CME activities include those supported by drug companies but intended to be independent of promotional influence. Accredited CME activities are attractive to physicians because they must earn a certain number of hours of CME each year to continue licensure, which attracts prescribers to industry-sponsored, free, CME. KOLs may also be used to deliver CME programs, adding value to the ¹³⁶ Deem_Eshleman_Janssen Deposition, pp.57-123 where she is questioned about work with outside organizations, specific messaging, marketing materials, and campaigns such as "Smart Moves" and "Smart Choices" aimed at educating youth about appropriate pain management. What she fails to recognize is that Janssen supported KOLs and the outside organizations it worked with in the creation and distribution of materials consistent with its own marketing messages. In addition to other evidence of support for advocacy organizations and KOLs, see the American Pain Foundation record of corporate support for its activities from Defendants, including Janssen at APS-MDL00000001.

sponsorship by the drug company.¹³⁹ However, this added value comes at the expense of potential bias that may stem from the use of a KOL who may have financial ties to the pharmaceutical company.

77. Medical education can also take the form of promotional-education activities. However, non-certified, promotional education that is controlled by a manufacturer must present information that is consistent with the FDA-approved label.¹⁴⁰ Yet, pharmaceutical companies seem to prefer accredited CME, possibly due to the expectation of return on investment which is estimated to be $3.56 in increased sales for each dollar spent on accredited CME.¹⁴¹
78. There are standards for non-promotional, accredited CME such as those established by the Accreditation Council for Continuing Medical Education (ACCME).¹⁴² These standards were created to ensure CME activities are independent, free of commercial bias, and not influenced by those with an economic interest in the CME content. In general, CME activities usually include:¹⁴³
- Educational Materials (e.g., publications, clinical practice guidelines)
 - Medical Education Conferences (e.g., symposia, lectures, workshops)
 - Peer-to-Peer Education (e.g., meetings with providers at their practice site, thought or opinion leaders)

79. Pharmaceutical companies can evaluate CME by assessing its impact on brand performance.¹⁴⁴

¹⁴⁵ Another basic method for assessing return on CME is to assess the numbers of participants attending a CME program. However, the value of CMEs as a marketing tool goes beyond these metrics and can include assessment of learning that occurred, the effectiveness of the presenters, or how the CME may impact practice and patient care. These evaluations provide useful information to marketers that can help shape future marketing activities.¹⁴⁶ Finally, CME is also a way to further peer-to-peer education when participants interact and influencers (KOLs) are employed to provide educational programs.¹⁴⁷

Clinical Practice Guidelines

80. Clinical practice guidelines (CPGs), sometimes referred to as clinical protocols or clinical pathways, are documents that contain structured recommendations designed to assist health care professionals in providing patient care. These guidelines seek to improve the process of care and patient outcomes and include decision aids in the selection of drug therapy.¹⁴⁸ Guidelines may be developed by institutions, researchers, advocacy groups, clinicians and others to provide evidence-based protocols for treatment. As noted above, Defendants used CPGs developed by KOLs and advocacy groups to perpetuate guidelines consistent with their marketing messages.

81. Pharmaceutical marketers have recognized that influencing the development of clinical guidelines and ensuring the dissemination of favorable guidelines can have a significant impact on which drugs prescribers select, and therefore sales of drugs.¹⁴⁹ CPGs impact prescribing in the same manner as formularies: when a guideline drug is positioned as a first-line therapy, prescribers are more likely to prescribe the drug.
82. Defendants worked with KOLs and advocacy in the development of CPGs which was a part of Defendants' marketing. While effective for generating sales, the use of KOLs and advocacy organizations that are financially tied to Defendants creates commercial bias that can become part of the CPGs developed. (See Schedules 17 & 18) A good example of the close relationships between KOLs and advocacy groups is seen, for example, in activities associated with the book, Responsible Opioid Prescribing by Dr. Fishman. This text is referred to by the Federation of State Medical Boards (FSMBs) as the "result" of FSMBs "Model Policy for the Use of Controlled Substance for the Treatment of Pain" which was supported by Defendants. Fishman was a prominent KOL. The Fishman book was distributed to nearly 162,000 physicians and other prescribers through accredited CME.¹⁵⁰ Reshaping the minds of prescribers through CPG development and associated distribution of these guidelines through educational (marketing) activities was an important aspect of Defendants marketing because of the impact it could have on sales.¹⁵¹

¹⁵¹ CPGs are generally perceived as unbiased giving these guidelines credibility. Further, prescribers concerned with liability feel more secure when prescribing based on accepted protocols and recommendations contained in CPGs. This gives CPGs the ability to significantly impact prescribing.

Influence on Formularies

83. Prescribing choices are influenced by which drugs are included on prescription formularies for insurance coverage.¹⁵² When formulary drugs differ from prescribers' habits, prescribers must adapt their medication choices to match a patient's formulary, or the patient may have higher out-of-pocket costs or be denied coverage. This ties formulary decisions by the TPP or PBM to the success of a branded drug¹⁵³ and creates opportunities for pharmaceutical marketers who can effectively impact formulary decision-making. The record in this case supports the proposition that Defendants recognized and acted on the need to monitor and maintain the desired formulary status for their drugs.¹⁵⁴

Direct-to-Consumer Marketing

84. In the 1980s pharmaceutical companies discovered the powerful impact that consumers could exert on prescribing decisions when they learn about drugs via media coverage, public relations efforts, news stories, and even advertisements for prescription medications. Marketers learned that DTC marketing and advertising could move a drug quickly through the early stages of the drug life cycle and rapidly increase adoption and expand sales by increasing patient and prescriber awareness of treatment alternatives.¹⁵⁵ However, DTC marketing may also trivialize drug use by making drug consumption a part of everyday life, mislead or confuse consumers, and increase costs by promoting more expensive brand name medications.^{156 157}
85. Currently, branded pharmaceutical manufacturers spend approximately six billion dollars annually marketing medications directly to consumers to increase awareness of drugs and

Prior Authorization is required, the sales reps are instructed to educate the doctor then teach the doctor “how to provide clinical rationale or documentation of a step therapy failure/prior authorization.” This includes helping the doctor through the process step-by-step; ACTAVIS0578801, the Willie Sutton rule invoked.

stimulate patient requests.^{158 159 160} Patient requests for a medication have been shown to substantially affect prescribing decisions, even when the requested medications are dangerous, and even when the drug itself was not directly advertised to consumers.¹⁶¹

86. The influence of DTC marketing on consumer awareness and actions with respect to opioids that are not advertised to patients through the media is indirect. Patients learn about drugs from other sources such as friends or family who take medications, advocacy groups who seek to increase awareness of diseases or treatments, and internet searches. Advocacy groups, such as the U.S. Pain Foundation, American Academy of Pain Medicine, or the American Pain Society, are an effective way for a pharmaceutical marketer to reach consumers without disclosing their commercial interests.

87. Patients see and hear messages from advocacy groups, which increases awareness and stimulates discussion with prescribers in the same fashion as advertisements. Further, advocacy groups are generally perceived to be unbiased and trustworthy, increasing the credibility of this source of drug information. However, there are concerns regarding this route of persuasion because manufacturers' financial support of advocacy groups appears to be linked to "opioid friendly," "amplified and reinforced messages favoring increased opioid use" by these groups.¹⁶²
88. DTC marketing also includes targeted patient education, such as, community-based talks designed for patients and caregivers, and other ways (e.g., patient brochures) of reaching patients with marketing messages.¹⁶³ These methods are effective for increasing awareness and stimulating patients to have discussions with prescribers. Indirect methods, such as the use of advocacy groups or direct patient contact via brochures and self-help aids, are additional ways for pharmaceutical marketers to reach prescribers vis-a-vis patients with messages about drugs.

Marketing Messages Are Different from the Package Insert

89. While the package insert (PI) is a part of a company's marketing, a drug's marketing is far more comprehensive than the PI and includes all materials, techniques, communications, and messages used to promote the drug.¹⁶⁴ In fact, one goal of drug marketing is to distill and communicate the technical information, or "drug features," in the PI into a few, brief talking points, which marketers seek to communicate as “drug benefits.”¹⁶⁵ ¹⁶⁶ This means marketers can be selective in what they choose to talk about in a sales encounter, but the information selected must be consistent with the PI. For example, a sales encounter might include statements about drug benefits that are designed to reduce concerns about the medication and stimulate prescribing but might not include information about potential harms.¹⁶⁷ ¹⁶⁸ ¹⁶⁹

Report of Matthew Perri III in Case no. 17-OP-45004 (N.D. Ohio) and Case No. 18-OP-45090 (N.D. Ohio)

¹⁶⁵ Drug features are the notable characteristics of the drug. For example, features might include a once a day dosage form, a smaller tablet size, or improved efficacy. Marketers seek to turn drug features such as these into customer benefits, in this example, better medication adherence, an easier to swallow table, or better pain relief respectively.

¹⁶⁶ In a sales situation, product benefits, or the “talking points” used by a PSR are limited by the amount of time available to communicate with a prescriber. For most prescribers this will be only a few minutes, placing time pressure on the sales encounter, and limiting the information that can be presented or discussed. See e.g., Wickline_MNK Deposition, pp.33-34; Gordon D. November 15, 2002, Dealing With Drug Reps. In this same plan, Endo recognized that oncologists are not afraid of abuse issues with cancer patients, further suggesting they knew abuse was a big issue with doctors, but, they still strategized to neutralize this objection to their product. 90. However, the PI is different than these carefully crafted promotional messages focused on turning drug features into benefits. The PI is technical and scientific information. It is not intended to be promotional.¹⁷⁰ Because time is limited in the sales encounter, and because drug benefits rather than technical descriptions of drug features are what persuade a prescriber, marketers do not use the PI as their primary tool, even though it must generally be referenced.¹⁷¹ Marketing messages (i.e., the information-flow that turns a drug feature into a drug benefit) are created with information the marketer wants the Customer to see and hear, not just a summary of the PI.
91. Pharmaceutical marketers, including Defendants, use many channels to communicate their messages or “talking points” to prescribers, including: personal selling (detailing), use of medical literature, continuing medical education (CME), development of clinical guidelines, sponsored meals, and opportunities for interactions with other prescribers (opinion leadership, peer-¹⁷⁰ While the PI is intended to be non-promotional, this was not always the case. The development of the OxyContin PI was described as: “The evolution of the package insert from its original draft over four years ago was a particularly interesting and informative process. Dr. Curtis Wright, the FDA medical reviewer, upon first reviewing it, stated that he had never seen a package insert with as much promotional and marketing material in it as ours. (Clearly our package insert team, representing Medical, Scientific Communications, Pharmacokinetics and Drug Metabolism, and Marketing, did its job skillfully.) Dr. Wright even told us that all of this promotional material would disappear. It did not. In fact, the package insert contains all of the major elements of our long-range marketing platform for this drug and proved most valuable when it came time to negotiate promotional copy with the Division of Drug Marketing, Advertising and Compliance, DDMAC. We argued extensively with DDMAC in January through March of this year. The result of these, “discussions” was a tremendous set of promotional claim rich copy. And the consequence? About 50 million in sales in the first year, more than 37,000 prescriptions per month, and a market share approaching 13 percent. That is quite a beginning.” (RS030719 Sackler, Richard, pp.202-203 and Exhibit 30).

92. Prescribers are exposed to marketers' carefully-crafted information¹⁷⁸ which is designed to be and is effective in generating prescription sales.¹⁷⁹ This implies prescribers see and hear information that marketers want them to see and hear, including information that goes beyond the scope of the package insert. Specifically, pharmaceutical companies provide information intended to induce the writing of prescriptions. Marketing principles suggest, and my experience confirms, prescribers consider all the information, from all sources, that is communicated to them by pharmaceutical companies, and rarely rely on the PI alone.¹⁸⁰

¹⁷⁸ While product labeling must conform to FDA requirements, when a sales representative discusses a drug with a prescriber, the sales representatives decides what information is covered and where emphasis is placed.

Branded and Unbranded Marketing

93. In pharmaceutical marketing, branded marketing is the promotion of a specific drug, by the drug's name and its indication. The FDA regulates branded marketing.¹⁸¹ Manufacturers submit advertising materials to the FDA's Office of Prescription Drug Promotion (OPDP), but FDA approval prior to dissemination is not required. Thus, inaccurate or unbalanced advertisement may be in circulation until the FDA identifies them.¹⁸² The FDA can intervene by way of a warning letter for advertising materials that it finds do not accurately convey a drug's labeling. FDA's oversight of advertising can be delayed, allowing improper advertising materials to reach a large audience before being pulled back.¹⁸³
94. Pharmaceutical marketing is also done through unbranded channels. Unbranded marketing includes activities that create awareness of a disease or condition, advocate for patient care or prepare a favorable environment in the marketplace for sales, without mentioning a drug's name and indication together. While unbranded advertisements often target patients; health professionals are exposed to these advertisements in the media as well. Unbranded advertisements focus on symptoms and encourage viewers to talk to their doctor about

¹⁸² It is my understanding that the OPDP is substantially understaffed in its ability to review the tens of thousands of pieces of advertising materials that come across its desk each year. The OPDP has fewer than 75 people on staff to review the approximately 75,000 pieces of advertising material it receives each year.

treatment.¹⁸⁴ Unbranded advertisements get patients thinking and talking about their disease with the goal of seeking treatment, which might include a prescription medication.^{185 186}

95. Marketers disseminate unbranded marketing messages directly, but a subtler form of unbranded advertising is when pharmaceutical marketers work with external organizations, such as the advocacy groups discussed above, with an interest in a specific disease, condition or even symptoms. Part of the appeal of unbranded advertising is that this form of advertising is generally perceived as neutral, “grassroots,” unbiased or scientific, but this can be misleading for two reasons. First, unbranded advertising does not have to inform the patient of the risks of a medication, conferring greater safety of use. Second, the advertising may be disseminated through a third-party organization that is funded by the marketer creating concerns for commercial bias in the information disseminated.¹⁸⁷

96. Defendants utilized unbranded marketing,¹⁸⁸ including partnering with advocacy organizations such as the American Pain Foundation, American Pain Society, American Academy of Pain Medicine, and many other regional and national organizations, to deliver unbranded marketing messages related to the use of opioids.¹⁸⁹
97. While unbranded marketing is perceived in a generally positive way by patients and may not be scrutinized by regulatory agencies in the same manner as branded marketing, unbranded marketing by companies should follow the same pharmaceutical marketing standards identified above.

II. MARKETING IN THE PHARMACEUTICAL SUPPLY CHAIN

98. Pharmaceutical marketing is implemented through an integrated supply chain (Figure 4). The stakeholders in this system work together to market, sell, and pay for pharmaceutical products. The U.S. pharmaceutical supply chain is composed of manufacturers, wholesale distributors, and pharmacies in the distribution of medicines and other stakeholders that coordinate revenue flows. Supply is ensured for prescription opioids by manufacturers, including Purdue, Endo, Janssen, Teva, Cephalon, Allergan, Insys, and Mallinckrodt, and their families of companies. Wholesale distribution of pharmaceuticals in the U.S. is highly concentrated, with AmerisourceBergen, Cardinal Health, and McKesson accounting for about 85% of the total market share of wholesalers.¹⁹⁰ Large pharmacy chains such as CVS, Walgreens, and Walmart also engage in internal wholesale distribution of medicines, acting as their own distributors either alone or in cooperation with wholesale distributors.¹⁹¹

99. The goal of the pharmaceutical supply system is to move products from manufacturers to the Customer. Each stakeholder has the common goal of selling pharmaceuticals by working with and through others in the supply chain system. Defendants had agreements to distribute products and marketing messages related to opioids.¹⁹² The primary messages in relation to wholesale distributors are expected to be focused on price, quality, drug availability, and service.¹⁹³ However, pharmacists that dispense prescriptions may also receive promotional messages focused on drug features and benefits, similar to prescribers.¹⁹⁴ This is important to pharmaceutical companies who will lose sales if resistance to their drug is encountered at any point in the system.

100. Revenue flows (Figure 4) between various parts of the supply chain system in a variety of forms, including payments, rebates, and chargebacks that ensure members of the supply chain system have data, such as utilization, supply, and distribution, showing exactly where each bottle of pills is going and at what price.¹⁹⁵ ¹⁹⁶ This data is used in financial planning, manufacturing, and marketing of pharmaceuticals and provides critical metrics to pharmaceutical marketers for assessing past, and planning future, marketing efforts.¹⁹⁷
101. Given the complexity of revenue flows, wholesalers and manufacturers have a synergistic relationship, each relying on the other to sustain sales. The wholesale function is also important to retail pharmacy, as wholesalers offer attractive pricing in connection with their negotiation of volume discounts with manufacturers. This is especially important for generic medicines, where pharmaceutical wholesalers can give preferential treatment to a specific manufacturer's products by stocking only (or preferentially) selected manufacturer's products for distribution and, or generic purchasing programs.¹⁹⁸

III. DEFENDANTS' MARKETING OF OPIOIDS

A. Background and Competitive Market for Opioids

102. According to the Kadian Learning System,²⁰⁰ an Allergan sales training manual, the need to regulate controlled substances (which includes opioids) to prevent diversion and abuse (corollaries of addiction) has been on the legislative agenda since about the 1930s. Yet, opioid use has grown over time in response to both patients' need for analgesia and the marketing of drugs to fill that need.²⁰¹
103. Morphine and meperidine have been available as commercial pharmaceutical drugs for many years. With health care professionals, the stigma of morphine limited its use primarily to end-of-life care and cancer pain. In the 1970's the pharmaceutical industry began to market codeine, hydrocodone, and oxycodone products in combination with aspirin or acetaminophen, under trade names such as Tylenol with Codeine (including multiple strengths of the codeine component) Vicodin and Percocet.²⁰² Over time, utilization of these drugs grew, but health professionals remained conservative in their prescription of opioids.²⁰³
104. In about 1982, Lortab (hydrocodone and acetaminophen) was approved for treating "mild to moderate" chronic pain. Five years later, Purdue's MS Contin (extended release morphine sulfate), which at the time did not have approval from the FDA as a new drug, was marketed as a "generic" morphine product prior to its formal approval under a new drug application by the FDA. Because of problems with orally administered morphine, Purdue was eager to introduce its MS Contin because of its new, extended-release formulation.²⁰⁴

²⁰³ Richard Sackler, M.D., August 28, 2015, Deposition in Civil Action No. 07-CI-01303, p.18.

105. In 1991, a unique product, Duragesic (fentanyl transdermal patch), was introduced to provide long-acting delivery of fentanyl for patients who needed sustained analgesia. Duragesic was direct competition for MS Contin in the extended release category of analgesia. Other competitors included hydromorphone and oxycodone combinations, but these did not provide for extended release.
106. During these early years up to about 1994, according to Purdue market research, the Class II opioid market was growing at a rate in excess of 12 percent each year. However, oxycodone combination product sales had slowed, and according to Purdue, this was likely due to the introduction of long-acting opioid formulations which were capturing market share, and that Class III opioids (e.g., hydrocodone) were easier to prescribe. Interestingly, Purdue also noted clinical equivalence between the oxycodone products and hydrocodone products in the OxyContin launch plan: *"Although no therapeutic difference has been demonstrated, Class III opioids are easier to prescribe because they can be phoned into the pharmacy and do not require a triplicate prescription."*²⁰⁵ Further, marketing planners at Purdue realized its MS Contin would soon be subject to generic competition and worked to develop a strategy to replace its vulnerable MS Contin sales with sales of its newer, long-acting oxycodone product, OxyContin.²⁰⁶
107. By 1995, Purdue had developed extensive marketing plans for the launch of OxyContin.²⁰⁷ This planning was effective as Purdue's OxyContin sales increased to nearly $1 billion in 2000 and estimated sales in excess of $1.3 billion in 2001.²⁰⁸ During about the same time period, Purdue's sales force grew from 256 PSRs in 1995 to 674 PSRs in 2000.²⁰⁹ The rapid increase in the market limited by the rate of the hydrophobic component. This delivery matrix provides the original drug at a slower rate over a longer period but does not alter the active ingredient.

for pain control attracted the attention of other manufacturers, and the market expanded with the addition of other branded opioid products such as Kadian (morphine sulfate extended-release, Allergan, 1996), Actiq (fentanyl oral lozenge, Anesta, 1998), and Avinza (morphine sulfate, Elan, 2002).

108. Between 1999 and 2003, Endo launched variant strengths of Percocet (a combination oxycodone/APAP product), doubling the maximum strength from 5 mg of oxycodone to 10 mg to capture more of the oxycodone market.²¹⁰ In 2006, Endo launched Opana / Opana ER (oxymorphone) with an understanding of the “hostile,” regulatory and political environment surrounding new long-acting opioids.²¹¹ Endo’s marketing plans for Opana considered the premise that there was little differentiation between Opana and other long acting opioids, but the company wanted to leverage its efficacy and safety data to position Opana as the most complete opioid on the market. Endo utilized messages (discussed in detail below) such as “Stay ahead of the Pain.”²¹²
109. In 2007, Endo introduced Patient Profiles, a teaching tool for sales representatives to help doctors identify patients for treatment with Opana. Endo created fictitious patients, like a carpenter suffering from chronic low back pain, an osteoarthritis patient with knee problems, or a cancer patient, to help sales representatives coach doctors into identifying potential patients in their practice. Each patient profile reflected different Opana features that Endo highlighted as dosing advantages.²¹³
110. After the initial boom in the development of long-acting formulations of opioids, some manufacturers focused on reformulating existing drugs. In 2009, Alpharma launched Embeda which was a combination of morphine and naltrexone. Covidien recognized this trend as well, as noted in their strategic vision, "Teaching old drugs new tricks to create value," and launched Exalgo (long-acting hydromorphone) in 2010.²¹⁴

111. As time passed, the use of opioid analgesics for both medical and non-medical uses grew in the U.S.²¹⁵ Alturi (2014) estimated overall opioid use increased by 1,448% from 1996 to 2011, with most of this growth occurring between 1996 and 2004. Misuse increased at three times this rate (4,680% from 1996 to 2011). Further, the increase of opioids for medical uses appears to contribute to increased non-medical use (diversion and abuse).²¹⁶
112. With both medical use and abuse of opioids on the rise, FDA scrutiny of opioid promotional messages resulted in several warning letters being issued to opioid marketers. Cited earlier in this Report, the FDA's letters focused on concerns that promotional materials used by drug makers contained false or misleading statements related to safety and efficacy (i.e., claims opioids were safer and more effective than the scientific evidence would support) and the promotion of opioids beyond their approved indications.

113. With respect to addiction, Defendants continued to seek ways to expand sales.²¹⁷ This included reformulations of existing drugs and focusing on claims of abuse deterrent formulations.^{218 219} To examine ways to reduce abuse, addiction, and deaths from opioids, Purdue's David Haddox, with other researchers, investigated strategies to mitigate the negative health consequences of opioid use.²²⁰ This work modeled three interventions (the introduction of tamper-resistant opioid formulations, marketing aimed at increased prescriber education, and reduced levels of patient abuse) that could impact both opioid sales and potential harm to patients. According to Dr. Haddox, the results of the simulations were based on the best data available, but data he stated was not perfect. From the simulations, the researchers concluded that creating tamper-resistant (abuse deterrent) formulations would increase prescriptions (increasing the total numbers of patients receiving opioids) and reduce the rate of harms (abuse, addiction and death). However, this result meant that the total number of patients who would abuse, become addicted or die from opioid use would increase. Conversely, increased prescriber education was expected to decrease the number of patients addicted, abusing or dying by 50% due to a reduction in the overall use of opioids. In other words, prescriber education about opioid risks was expected to deter prescription writing for opioids. Intervention three, a simulation of reduced patient abuse, also reduced death rates, but to a lesser extent than prescriber education.²²¹

114. Defendants could infer from these simulations that creating tamper-resistant drugs was the only viable strategy that could possibly lower the rate of abuse while allowing for increasing prescription sales. Executing marketing strategies aimed at education about abuse and addiction, changing perceptions about opioids, would hinder sales. According to Dr. Haddox, Purdue did not use the information developed from these simulations “in any tangible way.” He contended that opioid prescriptions in general had begun to decline, and while not making any claim of causality with respect to prescriber education, he believed the company’s PSRs emphasized new risk information as it became available.²²²
115. In my opinion, Dr. Haddox’s belief that opioid sales were declining was likely due to his awareness of decreasing OxyContin sales, which by this time were impacted by generic and other competition. Through all of this, Purdue’s marketing goals did not change. The company’s goal was to maximize sales of their opioid drugs, and as the simulation suggested, marketing aimed at increasing prescriber education about abuse and addiction would only serve to further reduce prescriptions. Instead, a focus on tamper-resistance could continue to increase prescriptions. From a marketing perspective, this provided at least two reasons for Defendants’ focus on tamper-resistant formulations designed to deter abuse. First, this was a marketing option that would not decrease opioid sales. Second, the tamper-resistant, abuse deterrent message would give physicians a sense of security that they could safely prescribe opioids for their patients which was consistent with Defendants’ marketing themes (discussed below).

B. Defendants Sought to Identify Customer Needs

116. A key principle of marketing is to identify an unmet need and work to fill that need. As noted by Dr. Richard Sackler, former President and Chairman of Purdue, the use of opioids to treat pain caused physicians concern because of efficacy, side effects, addiction, and abuse potential.²²³

Understanding these Customer concerns was important to opioid marketers because it would enable them to better meet Customers' needs.²²⁴

117. To gain such insights, Defendants analyzed the market for pain medications and conducted marketing research. This market research, dating back to before the launch of OxyContin, included information about physicians and payers concerns (barriers to prescribing) about the safety and risks of opioids.²²⁵ However, research also identified unmet needs, such as physicians' desires for pain medications that lasted longer, had less breakthrough pain, and were not as likely to be abused or diverted.²²⁶ Marketing theory suggests that if products existed that could satisfy these Customer needs, prescribing habits should change because these would be significant therapeutic advances in pain treatment. While the pharmacology of opioids did not substantially change, the marketing of opioids did.²²⁷
118. At Endo, market research told it that one of the "most important strengths" of Opana ER was the perception among HCPs that Opana ER had "low abuse potential."²²⁸ Endo viewed this as "an opportunity" on which it could build.²²⁹ Endo's message was being heard, because over time, HCPs who were surveyed continued to view “low abuse potential” as an advantage of Opana ER.²³⁰

119. In addition to qualitative marketing research, Defendants identified and disseminated research and other work that supported their desire to promote opioids as safer and better for treating pain than existing treatments. One study, frequently cited by Defendants in marketing materials, was authored by an industry supported opioid expert, Dr. Russell Portenoy,²³¹ which concluded, based on research with 38 patient cases, that “...opioid maintenance therapy can be a safe, salutary and more humane alternative to the options of surgery or no treatment in those patients with intractable non-malignant pain and no history of drug abuse.”²³² Another fundamental piece of support for Defendants’ claims about the safety of opioids came from a 1980 letter to the editor in the New England Journal of Medicine which concluded that addiction was rare in hospitalized patients with no history of addiction.²³³ These and other writings were

C. Defendants' Marketing Strategy for Opioids

120. In my analysis of Defendants' marketing of opioids, I reviewed many marketing and business documents. The examples that I have cited in my Report are representative of the larger set of documents I have reviewed. Further, the documents cited reflect the activities commonly used by pharmaceutical marketers and provide ample insight into Defendants' marketing activities. The marketing documents I reviewed were developed for use nationally and in Ohio.²³⁶

121. Defendants worked to create aggressive²³⁷ marketing strategies for opioids which served to distort needs, wants, and demand for opioids. Evidence that Defendants' marketing was aggressive is seen in marketing and brand plans,²³⁸ tactical plans, sales training²³⁹, and other documents and communications cited throughout this Report.^{240 241 242 243}

²³⁷ The term aggressive, from a marketing perspective, refers to how vigorously marketing strategies are developed and implemented.

²³⁸ See Schedule 8: Manufacturing Defendant Marketing Plans.

²³⁹ See Schedule 11: Manufacturing Defendant Sales Training Manuals and Scripts.

²⁴³ Defendants also created audio/video marketing pieces intended for a variety of internal and external audiences. For at least some of these video productions the tone is quite commercial. See e.g., JAN-MS-04212484, Dr. Rosenbery / Nucynta; JAN-MS-04213835, Dr. Pergolizzi / Nucynta ER; JAN-MS-04212411, Dr. Fine / Nucynta; JAN-MS-04212293, Dr. McCarberg, unbranded message; JAN-MS-0390726, Dr. Twillman (PhD, policy and advocacy director, AAPM; JAN00008022 (Peer-to-peer online program offering); JAN00009001; JAN00130397; JAN00131350; JAN-MS-02364493; MNK-T1_0007029131 (Propah Dose rap lyrics excerpt: "So when you start at the middle or you start at the top or you start with a little, make sure you just don't stop. 122. Defendants' aggressive²⁴⁴ marketing put patient welfare at risk through increased prescribing of opioids. The Defendants' marketing strategy for opioids was designed to turn drug features into drug benefits, create desirable positioning in Customers' minds, and stimulate prescriptions for opioids. Each of these activities is consistent with marketing principles, but not with industry standards for the marketing of dangerous drugs like opioids.

Marketing Information Bias Toward Benefits, not Harms

123. It should be noted that Defendants' marketing documents sometimes reference the need to disclose safety information for drugs, consistent with FDA-approved indications and prescribing information contained in the PI.²⁴⁵ In one Kadian plan, PSRs were specifically directed to discuss safety considerations with prescribers during sales calls.²⁴⁶ However, the preponderance of

Defendants' messages (discussed in detail below) focused on translating drug features into drug benefits, and downplayed information that would serve to discourage prescribing, including potential harms.

124. Like the Kadian plan, in a 60-slide sales training presentation for Nucynta, Janssen notes at the outset that PSRs should always "disclose safety information for all company-promoted products." This is the only mention of safety in this presentation; yet, there is ample content instructing PSRs on how to communicate drug benefits, including copay cards and other selling messages. The "core" messages in this presentation include: "Powerful Efficacy, Favorable Tolerability & Discontinuation Rates, Mechanism of Action, Dosing and Titration, Access and Affordability."²⁴⁷ Other Janssen programs provided similar training themes with a focus on benefits and selling, not on reasons to be cautious or to choose a non-opioid alternative.²⁴⁸
125. In a different kind of example, David Horton, a Product Manager from Mallinckrodt, was asked to identify key talking points for an upcoming meeting where face-to-face promotion of Xartemis, an extended-release oxycodone/acetaminophen, would occur. If the company's focus was to always provide a balance of information on the benefits and harms, it is certainly not reflected in this communication. Mr. Horton's list of talking points included: "set up the unmet need; establish a specific patient appropriate for XARTEMIS XR; Sell the benefits of IR AND ER – fast acting/long lasting; promote the impact of simple, twice daily dosing; and, close to action with specific patients." In the narrative and instruction provided in this instance, no mention of any cautionary information is made.²⁴⁹ In another Mallinckrodt sales leadership training for Xartemis, which included multiple training objectives, there is no training related to the dangers of opioids (harms), only training on how to achieve sales objectives such as “more rapid and sustainable sales.”²⁵⁰

126. The FDA warning letters cited above also support the proposition that Defendants minimized risk information in their marketing. These letters describe the FDA’s position on certain marketing for MS Contin, Duragesic, Avinza, Fentora, Ultram, Embeda, Kadian, and Nucynta.
127. Defendants also expressed views related to the communication of risk information about their drugs. For example, Mr. Bingol, a former Senior Director of Marketing at Endo who had responsibility for Opana and Opana ER, was asked about the issue of the history of abuse of oxymorphone. According to his testimony, Endo promoted the drug in accordance with its label, but never provided education to its sales force, health care providers or patients about history of abuse of oxymorphone pills.²⁵¹ Mr. Romaine, a former Vice President of Sales at Endo confirmed PSRs spent most of the time during their sales calls discussing the “features and benefits” of the products and did not, for example, review the black box warnings verbatim during their sales calls.²⁵²
128. Mr. Boyer, former President and CEO of Teva, testified that using sales representatives to communicate with doctors about the proper use and risks of opioids was cost prohibitive and not done by Teva. He further indicated that other, less costly ways of communicating this information were also not used by Teva.²⁵³ Mr. Webb, testifying for Mallinckrodt, was asked about risk information related to addiction in marketing materials. He stated, “—refresh my memory on what we consider the fair balance in the important patient risk information that we put on our material. But I know that we share with the physician, anytime opioids were being *discussed in our promotional material, that there is a risk of addiction. The degree of that, I can't speak to."*²⁵⁴

129. A heavy emphasis on persuasive selling techniques also propelled Defendants to focus on benefits over risks (discussed in Section III below) in order to increase awareness of core messages and generate prescriptions. In fact, when it came to communication of some of the most significant potential harms stemming from opioid use, PSRs were instructed not to initiate discussions with Customers on these issues (diversion, abuse, dependence, tolerance, or addiction). When these subjects were brought up by Customers, PSRs were taught to "[r]e-focus to the true pain patient and then sell."²⁵⁵
130. Other sales training documents also contained evidence of aggressive sales techniques. For example, Purdue PSRs were taught to use effective sales techniques focused on changing Customer behavior through role-play scenarios.²⁵⁶ In one such scenario, the physician is objecting to converting an NSAID patient to a 7-day transdermal opioid. Purdue PSRs are taught to challenge the objection with responses aimed at convincing the doctor to prescribe Butrans, specifically:

"[Scenario] 4. After conducting multiple calls, Dr. Simpson (Internal Medicine) has yet to prescribe Butrans. During a recent discussion he mentioned, "I would not convert from an NSAID to a 7-day transdermal opioid." After presenting the key attributes for Butrans, select the best powerful question to ask the HCP:

A. "Doctor, you have already said that you would prescribe Butrans. What is getting in the way of selecting an appropriate patient for Butrans?" Listen to HCP response and then deliver an appropriate closing statement.

B. "Why haven't you initiated Butrans?" Listen for response, revisit the attributes, and close on managed care coverage. "Doctor, knowing the coverage for Butrans has expanded to plans in your practice will you prescribe this week?"

C. "I realize that insurance coverage has been an issue for you in terms of prescribing an extended-release opioid." Focus on Dynamic Access Messaging insurance grid.

"Doctor, knowing that Butrans has broad formulary coverage will you prescribe for an appropriate patient?"

D. "Clinically speaking, if you had the opportunity to prescribe Butrans to a chronic pain patient inadequately managed on an NSAID, what would that patient look like?" Listen to gain the HCP's perspective, then say "Describe for me why you would initiate Butrans for this patient type." Listen for response, then ask: "What would the conversation sound like with the patient when discussing your clinical rationale for converting from an NSAID to Butrans?"

131. Endo trained PSRs respond to physician concerns using a technique known as Clarify, Respond, Confirm, and Transition (CRCT).²⁵⁷ This and other methods taught PSRs to address concerns about abuse with statements that verbally agree with concerns, reframe the issue, and refocus (distract) the prescriber with messages such as, "Doctor, can I discuss a few key advantages and benefits that OPANA® ER (oxymorphone) may offer those in need of an opioid for moderate to severe pain?" Further, Endo taught PSRs that "objections" are *"opportunities."*²⁵⁸
132. Specifically related to the balance between benefits and harms, the examples cited here are representative of other documents in the record. Objection handling and other sales training clearly provided PSRs with effective sales skills; however, the share of voice between benefits and harms was skewed toward benefits. Most of the documents I reviewed provided little or no information on the risks of opioids. When this information was included, it was with respect to how to minimize objections to opioid use.²⁵⁹ Further, aggressive sales techniques are not appropriate for dangerous prescription medications. At the least, these techniques minimize potential harms; at worst, they dismiss safety issues entirely, providing further support for the proposition that Defendants minimized concerns over the use of opioids.

Defendants' Marketing Messages

133. Using the proven marketing techniques described in this Report, the overarching goal of Defendants' marketing was to remove barriers to prescribing opioids and move opioid prescribers from trial to adoption, rapidly and durably.²⁶⁰ To accomplish these goals, Defendants needed to increase awareness of their drugs and overcome barriers related to prescribing opioids, including:²⁶¹

- redefining who will be treated with opioids;
- destigmatizing opioid use;
- convincing prescribers, payers, and other Customers, that pain should be treated with opioids first, and;
- convincing stakeholders that opioids are less risky, have less abuse potential, and fewer side effects than existing perceptions dictate.

134. Defendants utilized specific marketing messages to accomplish the goals of increasing awareness and removing barriers to opioid use. All of Defendants' messaging can be grouped into three (not mutually exclusive) general themes that worked together to create the new positioning of opioids in Customers minds, namely:

²⁶⁰ See e.g., PPLPC008000005359, p.3, "Global vision for 2000 and beyond: MS Contin revolutionized how Cancer pain is treated; OxyContin revolutionized how non-cancer pain is treated; Palladone XL will revolutionize how all persistent pain is treated." These statements reflect a future vision of marketers at Purdue with respect to the drug Palladone which was approved by the FDA in 2004. Segment strategies are enumerated.

- Dependence, tolerance, addiction, and withdrawal should not be a concern in prescribing opioids. This included messages such as, for example, patients taking opioids for pain do not become addicted; fewer than 1% of pain patients get addicted; pain cancels or prevents euphoria, which is why pain patients do not get addicted; extended release (e.g., q 12 hour dosing) formulations prevent peaks and valleys, which in turn prevents euphoria and addiction; extended release formulations are hard to abuse, so there is no/less danger in prescribing them. Tolerance is not a concern because doses can be increased without limit; withdrawal/physical dependence is not a problem because patients can easily be tapered off opioids and because physical dependence itself does not produce compulsive out-of-control use or other opioid-related problems.
- Opioids are effective for, and improve functioning in, patients taking them for long-term and chronic use. This theme includes the expansion of the indication for patients who require opioid therapy for “more than a few days” into “chronic use” as well as the claim that there is evidence of improved functioning in patients taking opioids for chronic pain; the omission of side-effects associated with long-term use such as hyperalgesia²⁶² and sedation.
- Opioids should be first-line therapy for pain. Using their knowledge of their products and Customers, Defendants turned product features into product benefits by transforming the first two themes into a third: pain should be treated with opioids first. The rationale for this was clear. If addiction, dependence, tolerance, and withdrawal are not concerning, and if opioids make the pain patient’s life better, why not start with opioids? This theme also

Using these three themes, Defendants' marketing changed the face of pain therapy in the U.S. by re-positioning these drugs in Customers' minds.

Theme One: Dependence, tolerance, addiction, and withdrawal should not be a concern in prescribing opioids.

135. One of the barriers to opioid prescribing has been the potential for, and fear of, addiction.

Numerous marketing messages used by Defendants' communicated information that supported a change in the paradigm regarding the link between addiction and opioids.²⁶³ ²⁶⁴ Examples of these messages are provided in Table II: Marketing Messages, and include:

- Janssen's internal sales materials for Duragesic that stated "[p]hysicians should not let concerns of physical dependence deter them from using adequate amounts of opioids in the management of severe pain when such use is indicated" and claimed a lower abuse potential for Duragesic;²⁶⁵ should not be considered addiction.”²⁷²

136. Other marketing messages claimed patients with legitimate pain cannot become addicted because their pain protects against addiction.²⁷³ Defendants also taught Customers that when the signs of addiction are present, it is just a symptom of undertreated pain or “pseudoaddiction,”²⁷⁴ and the solution to pseudoaddiction is to prescribe more opioids.
137. Fears were also minimized through marketing communications that indicated problems like addiction occur only when opioids are abused or used illegally,²⁷⁵ and if opioids are taken as prescribed, the risk of addiction is rare (less than 1 percent).²⁷⁶ Defendants further downplayed addiction by carefully defining the terms “tolerance” and “pseudotolerance” to justify marketing the highest doses of opioids to patients.²⁷⁷ According to Defendants’ messaging, each of these conditions has a common solution: taking higher doses of opioids.²⁷⁸ As late as 2016, Defendants were still training sales personnel to minimize addiction concerns by blurring the terms “drug abuse,” “drug addiction,” and “dependence” and continuing to suggest that a physically-dependent patient cannot be addicted to an opiate if that patient experiences pain.²⁷⁹

ENDO-CHI_LIT-00084049	2004	WHAT SHOULD I KNOW ABOUT OPIOIDS AND ADDICTION? You or your family may have questions about addiction. It is important to understand what addiction is. Addiction is a chronic brain disease that can occur in some people exposed to certain substances such as alcohol, cocaine, and opioids. Taking opioids for pain relief is not addiction. People addicted to opioids crave the opioid and use it regularly for reasons other than pain relief. “Pain relief is an important medical reason to take opioids as prescribed by your doctor. Addicts take opioids for other reasons, such as unbearable emotional problems. Taking opioids as prescribed for pain relief is not addiction.”	Endo

140. In addition to the messages above, Defendants' marketing messaging also sought to minimize concerns over addiction, tolerance, and dependence through claims that extended-release and

This document presents numerous messages for the Purdue speakers training program, including for example: "Addiction unlikely in PT without prior history of substance abuse", "pts easily tapered from opioids in MPC's suggests that CPS population without prior hx of drug abuse is distinctly different from street addicts", "Risk of Addiction - studies suggest that inherent predispositions distinguish chronic pain population from addicts (e.g., personality characteristics)", "Addiction studies- conclude that CP patients have low risk of addiction despite chronic opioid usage," "Patients at increased risk may still be appropriately treated with modified-release opioid formulations; however these patients will require intensive monitoring for signs of misuse, abuse, or addiction."; PKY183043997, (A consensus statement from the American Academy of Pain Medicine and the American Pain Society), which states, "Furthermore, experience has shown that known addicts can benefit from the carefully supervised, judicious use of opioids for the treatment of pain due to cancer, surgery, or recurrent painful illnesses such as sickle cell disease." In pharmacy it is understood that this use of opioids may be appropriate in some patients with these conditions. Yet, this document also suggests that "commonly held assumptions [regarding addiction] need modification," including the common "misunderstanding" of addiction and mislabeling of patients as addicts which the authors believe results in unnecessary withholding of opioids, citing "studies indicate that the de novo development of addiction when opioids are used for the relief of pain is low" and challenges respiratory depression, tolerance and diversion.

²⁸⁷ With respect to the formulations of Duragesic, Janssen sought to differentiate its product claiming its “reservoir” technology was superior to the competition’s “matrix” transdermal delivery technology because it was harder to abuse, and had lower “street” value. This was the marketing message until Janssen switched to the same matrix technology in about 2008 and initiated studies to suggest there is not data to support any difference between reservoir and matrix formulations. The economic and marketing reasons to change the Duragesic formulation seemed to outweigh concerns over abuse. Further this example demonstrated that indeed, new formulations were not really different. 141. Defendants used this type of messaging to differentiate their newer formulations from older, competing drugs with the same active ingredients. For example, Fentora (fentanyl buccal tablets, transmucosal immediate release fentanyl or “TIRF”) was introduced claiming to solve two opioid concerns: (1) the addiction risks of opioids such as OxyContin; and (2) “Breakthrough Pain.”²⁸⁹ Opana (oxymorphone) messages positioned it as a lower-risk, higher-efficacy extended release opioid.²⁹⁰
142. Other messages included claims that extended-release drugs had fewer peaks and valleys in absorption and elimination, with less highs and lows, and therefore less chance of addiction and abuse, and that abuse deterrent formulations reduce abuse and are safer than non-deterrent formulations.^{291 292}

143. Providing a different perspective on addiction and opioid abuse, Mr. Cramer, formerly with Purdue, stated with respect to opioid abuse, “...an opioid is an opioid is an opioid...” Suggesting he believes that all opioids have similar potential for harms.²⁹³

Theme Two: Opioids are effective for, and improve functioning in, patients taking them for long-term and chronic use.

144. In addition to minimizing concerns over addiction, tolerance, dependence, and abuse, Defendants’ marketing messages also sought to communicate that for those in pain, opioids can make life better. Communicating messages to Customers like, “there can be life with relief”²⁹⁴ and “[g]ive your patients the freedom of a life uninterrupted by chronic pain,”²⁹⁵ Defendants’ sought to change the belief (a barrier to opioid use) that using opioids results in a decline in functioning. The Kadian Learning System states: “Although the effect of the therapy in reducing the patient’s pain is of primary importance, the improvement in the patient’s ability to function is considered the gold standard of chronic pain treatment.”²⁹⁶
145. This was evidenced in the Opana platform as well, with their tagline of “Opana ER protects me from pain for a full 12 hours so I can go about my daily activities,”²⁹⁷ and other Opana ER documents stating:

“Maximum improvement in functionality, consistent pain relief and the best tolerability profile in its class. Enables patients to function better throughout the day, sleep well through the night, and achieve the QoL they desire, with minimal cognitive and other side effects.”²⁹⁸

normally, stating, “Fact: When used correctly for appropriate conditions, opioids may make it easier for people to live normally.”²⁹⁹

146. As noted in Table II, other messages included, for example:

- Defendants’ opioids improve function and will make your life better without risk.³⁰⁰
- Opioids have no maximum dose. If you are in pain, more opioids can be given without additional risk (“titrate to effect”).³⁰¹
- Opioids can be prescribed for any duration without risk.³⁰²

147. The book Defeat Chronic Pain Now sponsored by Mallinckrodt’s C.A.R.E.S. alliance and used as a sales tool states, “It is currently recommended that every chronic pain patient suffering from moderate to severe pain be viewed as a potential candidate for opioid therapy.”³⁰³ The book echoes Defendants’ core marketing proposition to treat all pain with opioids. In at least some of the opioid marketing, there did not appear to be any boundaries as to who would be targeted with opioid messaging. In a Janssen presentation related to the Imagine the Possibilities Pain Coalition, Janssen lays out plans to reach out to youth, advocating to “[r]each early: elementary school level; via respected channels, e.g., coaches” to deliver a “practical message” that *“[p]ain is your body telling you something important.”*³⁰⁴ This presentation also suggests targeting returning veterans and the media to carry the desired opioid messaging: pain must be treated, and treatment with opioids is a good idea.

148. Defendants also focused on using opioids for all types of pain with a rationale that quality of life as a patient outcome is a reason to consider opioid therapy. Some examples include:

- An Opana ER branded slide set on Managing Chronic Osteoarthritis Pain, where elderly patients are targeted for opioid therapy: “All patients with moderate to severe pain, pain-related functional impairment or diminished quality of life due to pain should be considered for opioid therapy.”³⁰⁵
- An Endo project brief for an Opioid Patient Brochure highlights “Reasons to Believe” and lists “Good for constant pain no matter the cause.”³⁰⁶
- A reminder for Purdue field sales personnel discussing the pediatric indication for OxyContin states, “The indication does not specify any particular chronic pain conditions.”
- Janssen promotes opioid use for any condition with the line “Consider for all patients with moderate to severe non-cancer pain, but weigh the influences.”³⁰⁷

Theme Three: Opioid should be first-line therapy for pain.

149. Communicating the message that treating pain patients with opioids first, giving these analgesics preference over other standard pain management regimens, provided Defendants a means to increase overall use of opioids and expand the market for these drugs. Defendants' key marketing messages associated with this theme (Table II and Schedule 10) include messages such as:

- OxyContin, "one to start with, the one to stay with"³⁰⁸
- Actiq, "will encourage pure opioid therapy at a much more earlier point in treatment"³⁰⁹
- Purdue's messaging to prescribers regarding OxyContin at a meeting of primary care physicians:

*"Pri-Med represents an important opportunity for the promotion of OxyContin Tablets to an audience of influential primary care physicians from across the area. A primary goal for the Pri-Med meeting is to continue to expand the patient types that are appropriate for OxyContin Tablet therapy. It is important to position OxyContin according to the Package Insert for use in the post-operative patient."*³¹⁰

150. In addition to promoting the need to treat pain, Defendants created a market for "Breakthrough Pain (BTP)." BTP was important in expanding overall demand for opioids because it provided a new Customer need that could be met with Defendants' drugs. It was a key message that could benefit sales of drugs designed to treat BTP or drugs claiming to minimize the occurrence of

BTP.³¹¹ In fact, the 2002 marketing plan for Actiq stated that Actiq marketing would center on several goals, including “[e]stablish a solid public relations campaign to begin raising awareness of BTP and ACTIQ among targeted patient populations.”³¹² BTP was also a prime message utilized to revitalize the marketing of Duragesic (transdermal fentanyl), which by the time of marketing drugs like Opana, was an older agent.³¹³

151. Defendants also worked to change existing thinking about opioids as first line therapy for pain by asserting other marketing messages, including:

- Undertreated pain should be treated with opioids.³¹⁴
- There is more risk of leaving pain untreated than using opioids to treat pain.³¹⁵
- Opioids offer more effective pain control and are safer than alternatives.³¹⁶
- Acute pain should be treated with long acting opioids.³¹⁷

152. As detailed here, in Table II, and in Schedule 10, Defendants' marketing messages were aimed at shifting Customers' thinking regarding the use of opioids for the treatment of pain. This change in the prescribing paradigm included seeking to treat most all pain patients with opioids first. Because Defendants' strategy to shift medical thinking worked, it expanded the total market for opioids.

D. Marketing Messages Over Time

153. As noted in this Report, some of the marketing messages employed by Defendants changed over time, for example, when the OxyContin PI changed in 2006³¹⁸, or when part of the marketing focus shifted to tamper-resistance and abuse-deterrence. More recently, Purdue reports that it has stopped marketing opioids entirely.³¹⁹ However, marketing principles teach us that the impact of the early marketing, that was so effective in shifting prescribers' paradigms about opioids, would be durable and resistant to change.³²⁰ The aggressive marketing practices employed by Defendants beginning in the mid-1990s created the new opioid paradigm that it provides the continuous around the clock. Pain control that they need. Since there's no way to determine which patients will develop Wind Up, It is imperative to treat every patient as if they will."; "Patient Brochure, Living with chronic pain – Your guide to better days and night," from the makers of Avinza® 24 hour (morphine sulfate extended-release capsules), at END00014047: "Once-a-day medication means you do not have to worry about when to take your next dose." "AVINZA® is the only opioid approved to be dosed not more than once daily. It contains morphine, which has a long history of pain control. When a patient takes AVINZA®, morphine is released gradually over 24 hours. This is why AVINZA® helps people with chronic pain all day and all night. The AVINZA® capsule is designed to keep the amount of morphine in your body steady throughout the day. In clinical studies, AVINZA® gave patients Continuous, reliable pain control over 24 hours with just 1 capsule a day; More active days; More restful nights" END00014041-58; "acute pain doesn't last 4-6 hours- neither should its treatment" Core message email, MNK-T1_0000130448; See also, Table II and Schedule 10.

³¹⁸ Mr. Cramer noted in his deposition with respect to OxyContin, "once any reference to the risk of addiction being was removed [from FDA approved labeling], we never referred to it again." (Cramer, Phil 11-20-18 Deposition, p.245.) From a marketing perspective, beliefs, attitudes, and intentions, once created are durable in Customers' minds. Purdue's marketing would be expected to have lasting impact.

³¹⁹ Cramer, Phil_11.20.18, p.161.

³²⁰ It is generally understood in marketing that customer beliefs, attitudes, intentions, and values are relatively durable. When considered in relation to products, i.e., beliefs or intentions regarding a product, it is difficult for marketing to create or change them. Hence, once new paradigms are formed, these new beliefs or intentions also become resistant to change. The marketing texts cited earlier in this Report provide extensive insight into this marketing principle.

resulted in blockbuster sales. Marketing principles teach us that two decades of Defendants' marketing aimed at a paradigm shift, will take time and effort to correct.³²¹

E. Defendants' Marketing Violated Industry Standards

154. I was asked to assume that the Plaintiffs' expert reports rendered in this case assessed the common messages delivered by the Defendants' marketing and hold the opinions that Defendants' messages were false, misleading, inaccurate, or designed to misstate the risks and benefits of Defendants' drugs. This is consistent with the FDA documents (i.e., warning letters) cited in this Report regarding the false or misleading nature of Defendants' marketing. These opinions are also consistent with the proposition evaluated above that Defendants had a bias toward benefits over harms in their marketing.
155. Further, the use of influencers, KOLs, and professional (advocacy) organizations that Defendants funded and influenced to deliver these messages was more credible because Defendants' hid their influence from the medical community and the public, creating perceptions of unbiased and more scientific information. The marketing analysis in the Report confirms that KOLs and advocacy organizations furthered Defendants' desired promotional messaging in the marketplace. However, Defendants were not forthcoming about their support of these people and activities, or their influence over the conclusions drawn. Defendants' marketing activity supports the proposition that these behaviors were designed to mislead Customers about the impartiality of the messages. In my professional opinion, and considering the full scope of Defendants' marketing, Defendants violated marketing standards by creating and disseminating false or misleading marketing messages that downplayed or minimized the risks associated with opioids, while emphasizing the benefits of their drugs, and by disguising their support of activities aimed at increasing sales of their own products.

F. The Defendants' Marketing Was Effective

156. By minimizing concerns over opioid use with these key messages, Defendants' marketing effectively deconstructed the barriers associated with opioids for the treatment of pain. The marketing documents recognized concerns over opioid use, but as a barrier to be overcome through marketing and not as a public health concern.³²² After reviewing numerous marketing documents describing Defendants' marketing planning and execution, spanning more than two decades, it is my opinion that Defendants' approach to marketing opioids was purposeful, aggressive, and effective in increasing sales. The marketing outcomes, including Defendants' own internal metrics, support the fact that the Defendants were able to persuade prescribers and other stakeholders to increase the use of opioids for pain.
157. The impact of marketing efforts can be assessed by examining sales or by how well specific marketing goals were met. Defendants' marketing plans and metrics reveal many such goals and certainly confirm the association between marketing and sales. In the pharmaceutical market, sales are measured through dollar sales figures or by proxy variables such as the numbers of prescriptions written for a drug (TRx), the numbers of "new" prescriptions (NRx), or market share.
158. However, marketing success is relative, as not all products achieve the same levels of utilization. For some products, small increases in TRx or market share can be viewed as success.³²³ For example, Endo set a goal for its Opana ER (oxymorphone ER) "To become the #2 branded oral solid CII analgesic..." in recognition that this brand would never overcome oxycodone in market share.³²⁴ Endo's former Senior Director of Marketing, Demir Bingol, agreed that Opana ER was a "successful" franchise that met or exceeded its sales goals.³²⁵ Given this characteristic of the prescription market, drugs do not have to be blockbusters to be successful.³²⁶ Yet, blockbuster drugs provide insight into how powerful pharmaceutical marketing efforts can be.

159. For example, in its 1995 Launch Plan, Purdue set targets for OxyContin at $25 million in dollar sales and 205,000 prescriptions (TRx) for the drug's first year.³²⁷ Sales surpassed expectations and by 2002, OxyContin sales were targeted to reach $1.2 billion. In 2016, OxyContin sales objectives set targets at $1.442 billion, 4.792M TRx (a seven percent decrease YOY) and a 19.3% share in the extended release opioid market, a decline of just less than one percent.³²⁸ Over a period of more than 20 years, OxyContin went from launch to mature drug status and was able to maintain its market position in spite of the dynamics of the opioid market which was characterized by intense competition and a growing national awareness of the opioid epidemic. This performance, when considered in conjunction with the extensive and detailed marketing plans developed for OxyContin confirms that OxyContin marketing worked to achieve sales of OxyContin.
160. Janssen's Duragesic also demonstrated high year-over-year growth averaging almost 31 percent a year between 1996 and 2002. With sales on track for a yearly total of 692 million in 2002, the company had a vision for 1 billion in sales by 2004 and $2 billion by 2008. These sales figures led Janssen to conclude that Duragesic's product life cycle was still in the growth phase nearly 10 years into its marketing. Most products are in the maturity or decline phases of the product life cycle this far past their introduction.³²⁹ However, due to generic competition, Duragesic sales expectations began to slip after about 2003, but the business plans mapped strategies to continue the brand's success.³³⁰

Pharmaceutical Marketing Metrics

161. Sales figures are indicators of success in reaching marketing goals and may also be used to monitor corporate goals and even individual (e.g., PSR) performance. Based on established metrics, marketers can assess the overall effectiveness of their marketing, specific advertisements and tactics, or an individual, group, or region by looking at performance over time.³³¹ For example, strategies and tactics can be tested using common metrics (e.g., TRx, NRx, customer satisfaction) before and after an asset is deployed, messages are communicated, or programs are implemented.³³² ³³³ Defendants used all these metrics to monitor the impact of their marketing and to adjust their efforts to help ensure that marketing goals were met.³³⁴

³³¹ A relevant metric for a sales professional might be the number of prescriptions (TRx) or the number of “new” prescriptions (NRx) stimulated in a geographic area or for a specified time period. See e.g., Coaching & Developing Report, JAN-MS-02991475; ACTAVIS0718729, Dashboard Region A100; ENDO-CHI_LIT-00032434, Opana Brand 2009 Operational Plan.

162. The data provided by marketing research metrics (e.g., deciles, TRx or NRx, product switching, restarting, new prescriptions, refill prescriptions, or location of service such as long-term care, hospital or community, mail order) can be very detailed, for example, breaking down TRx or NRx to the prescriber or zip code level.³³⁵ ³³⁶ These metrics are used to benchmark performance and are also useful in identifying potential market growth or opportunities.³³⁷ Indeed, the use of prescriber identifiable data permits manufacturers to precisely monitor and improve the effectiveness of their marketing by evaluating and compensating PSRs based on their individual results.³³⁸
163. Return on Investment (ROI) is also used to determine the relative value of competing marketing strategies and tactics.³³⁹ However, marketers also use other less quantitative metrics such as “return on objective” or ROO. ROO is best suited to assessing the results of work with, for example, advocacy groups where achievement of an objective is the outcome desired. For example, alliance building, peer-to-peer relationships, customer engagement, and support of advocacy; while all are marketing activities and important to sales, the success of these activities (e.g., on goodwill, customer loyalty) cannot be fully measured through sales.³⁴⁰

164. Based on the metrics I have seen, there is support for the proposition that Defendants' marketing increased the size of the opioid market, effectively expanding sales and increased the use of these dangerous drugs. These efforts and resources devoted to opioid marketing were spent to change prescribers and other stakeholders' perceptions about opioids. There is a clear association between opioid utilization and patient outcomes, including increased analgesia, side effects, diversion, overdose, and death.³⁴¹ In my opinion, Defendants who marketed opioids by minimizing the barriers to their use created an expanded demand and substantially contributed to the opioid epidemic.

G. Defendants' Generic Marketing

The Market for Generics

165. Brand name pharmaceutical manufacturers invent and market single-source medication drugs and have exclusive rights to market their patented drugs until patents expire or products are licensed to other companies. The stakeholders in the market for generics are like those for branded drugs. (Figure 3.) Before patent expiration, brand manufacturers extensively advertise and promote their drugs to prescribers, PBMs, TPPs, and others, to increase demand and market share for their products. When manufacturers are effective in creating demand for a drug this benefits the branded medication and creates opportunities for generic entry to the market in the future when the exclusivity granted by the patent expires. Branded advertising prior to generic introduction is both a benefit and threat to generic companies: branded advertising can expand the market and create loyalty for branded products, making it harder for generics to gain sales once patents have expired.

166. Generics are almost always cheaper than their branded counterparts. The competition that results from generic competitors typically results in prices about 85% less than the brand name drug.³⁴² Recognizing the potential for cost savings, PBMs, TPPs, and consumers alike have contributed to the extensive use of generics in the U.S. today.
167. Generic manufacturers produce drugs that are chemically identical and bioequivalent³⁴³ (same active ingredient and same processing within the body) to the respective brand-name medication and must meet all FDA and industry manufacturing standards (including all current good manufacturing practices or cGMPs). However, generic manufacturers do not have to conduct safety or efficacy studies needed for the new drug approval process.

168. Generic companies seek markets for medications with higher pre-patent-loss revenues,³⁴⁴ higher hospital sales, and drugs for chronic diseases because these markets offer high potential for profits.³⁴⁵ The key variables generic manufacturers consider when deciding to enter a new generic market include consideration of: demand and commercial potential, other market dynamics,³⁴⁶ technical manufacturing issues,³⁴⁷ manufacturing costs, supply chain considerations, clinical risk of the drug, competition, the regulatory landscape including any lingering patent (intellectual property) issues such as patent extensions or legal challenges to generic production.³⁴⁸
169. The potential for sales, which is to a degree dependent on brand-name sales revenue³⁴⁹ is typically the primary driver of the “go-no-go” decision to enter a generic market. When considering entering a new market, generic companies must carefully evaluate where resources should be focused and balance multiple inputs to decide to enter a market as opportunities, ³⁴⁴ Higher sales could be a result of increased advertising spending by brand manufacturers prior to patent loss or due to other characteristics of the drug, such as it being a significant improvement over previous therapy.

³⁴⁶ In marketing, careful assessment of the external environment is critical: analyzing, for example, strengths, weaknesses, opportunities and threats, social, legal or regulatory issues. A good example of this is how access to controlled substances is more restrictive than most other drugs, representing a potential limitation in the market which should be considered in the decision to enter a market.

³⁴⁷ Some medications are technically more difficult to produce and a manufacturer that has special skills with these more difficult drugs might have a competitive advantage over other producers. Quality control considerations may present challenges for medications that are more technically difficult to produce.

³⁴⁸ A good example of market entry planning and decision making can be seen in the Actavis Pipeline Committee Meeting, October 19, 2011, ACTAVIS0961179, 163 pages, especially at p.2-7, 67-70.

challenges, and profits vary significantly between alternatives. The goal of the generic manufacturer is to maximize ROI.³⁵⁰

170. Successful companies have a strategic focus, carefully evaluate risks and maximize ROI by carefully managing their product portfolio.³⁵¹ ³⁵² These considerations must be optimized because in the generic industry manufacturers do not rely on inventing new products to ensure success. Instead, generic companies leverage their strengths to gain competitive advantages and sell products. A detailed assessment of all these variables is necessary to ensure a good market entry decision and increase the likelihood of success (maximized ROI).
171. In the prescription opioid market, the market for branded drugs expanded quickly making the market attractive for future generic entry. The growth in opioid use, resulting from the marketing efforts of brand-name opioid manufacturers, resulted in higher sales for manufacturers and higher profit potential for generic entrants making the market for opioid analgesics attractive to generic manufacturers.

Generic Pharmaceutical Marketing

172. Pharmaceutical companies who sell generic drugs, like their branded counterparts, are sophisticated in their use of data and knowledge of the prescription market. These companies analyze their own capabilities, supply, and demand for products, and the expectation of profitability upon market entry.

³⁵⁰ In addition to the ROI, the financial criteria generally used to measure project success include internal rate of return, cash flow, and payback period. See e.g., Actavis, Marketing Department Overview, Allergan-Myers-028, Acquired_Actavis_01367234.

³⁵¹ See e.g., Suchak K and Murray LJ. Generic portfolio management: A paradigm for minimizing risk and maximizing value. J of Generic Medicines 2017; 13(2):60-63;

³⁵² A product portfolio for a pharmaceutical manufacturer is the collection of products (product lines, or brands) that are produced. These products are managed by selecting those with the best strategic fit for the company, optimizing the mix of products to draw on company and market opportunities and to continuously monitor the portfolio for possible changes over time. This process is commonly referred to as portfolio management.

173. For generic medications, the marketing process is different than, but in some cases dependent on, branded drug marketing.³⁵³ Generic manufacturers primarily target pharmacies and wholesale distributors to generate sales but may also target TPPs or PBMs when formulary access is a concern. For generics, the chemical entity selected by the prescriber is usually available from multiple manufacturers who are all competing for market share.³⁵⁴ While prescribers still choose the medication to use, it is the pharmacy provider, sometimes working in concert with, and subject to the desires of wholesalers, TPPs or PBMs, who typically selects the manufacturer that will supply the generic medication.³⁵⁵ Consequently, generic pharmaceutical manufacturers focus their promotional marketing efforts on pharmacy providers (e.g., retail-chain pharmacies or mail-order pharmacies) and wholesalers (e.g., McKesson).³⁵⁶ The key marketing messages are focused on competitive prices and the assurance of a consistent supply of quality generic medications.³⁵⁷
174. When a branded manufacturer markets a competing generic for its own brand, it is more difficult to separate branded from unbranded marketing. For example, Kadian was marketed by Actavis as a branded drug, but when competition (Watson) offered a generic morphine sulfate, Actavis responded with its own authorized generic for Kadian. Keeping the Kadian sales team in ³⁵³ Branded drug marketing creates the market for a medication. When patents expire, generic manufacturers take advantage of the opportunities created by brands, prior to generic entry. More aggressive brand advertising can lead to more attractive generic markets.

³⁵⁴ For example, generic Lipitor® – atorvastatin – might be available from generic manufacturers Ranbaxy, Teva, and Mylan.

³⁵⁵ The role of the wholesaler in capturing competitive market share is important. Consider promotions like the 1995 Bergen Brunswig “Glimmer” button on its AccuSource system. This button would show up when a pharmacist sought to purchase a targeted competitor. Pushing the button revealed information on OxyContin to encourage the pharmacist to consider OxyContin instead. (PDD8801142910, Glimmer Button promotion email). This includes marketing services related to pre-launch, which ensure product availability once a drug is marketed. (See e.g., Minutes from the OxyContin Pre-Launch, June 2, 1995; see also, e.g., regarding the wholesale distribution supply chain relationships, National Accounts Memorandum Memo on Wholesaler Development (PKY180256902).)

³⁵⁶ See e.g., OxyContin Tables NWDA Statement, “Our most important goal was to obtain stocking into the wholesalers and independent pharmacies.” PDD1701796415; OxyContin Distribution Plan, September 6, 1995 from G.R. Green, PKY181732400.

³⁵⁷ See, e.g., Stevenson, George-Endo Deposition pp. 92-96 (explaining generic manufacturers compete based on service levels, fulfillment, and price).

place, Actavis sought to expand the market for Kadian by combining both brand and generic sales for the drug. Generic Kadian by Actavis would be marketed as an alternative to MS Contin and for price sensitive audiences, with marketing messages focusing on its more favorable pricing and availability, and that generic Kadian has the “Same features and benefits as the branded product.” While maintaining share of Kadian was important, the goal was to drive sales toward Actavis generic Kadian. This provides insight into how generic and brand marketing are interrelated and difficult to separate.³⁵⁸

175. Finally, with respect to this example, the importance of the pharmaceutical supply system can be seen. Wholesaler distributors were integral to selling the generic Kadian since these entities can select the generic manufacturer offering the best pricing and availability to use in their generic source programs and are pivotal in communicating price to pharmacies.
176. As seen with the Kadian example above, some Customers are more sensitive to the price variable of the marketing mix and may defer purchase, or purchase an alternative if the price does not represent a good value for the Customer. This includes patients without prescription insurance, patients with high copayments or deductibles, patients who are in the Medicare “donut hole” and must pay for prescriptions out-of-pocket, and others.³⁵⁹ For these customers, making a lower priced generic available will increase access because any price barrier is reduced or removed. Therefore, generics work to expand the market by making lower priced alternatives, that patients can more easily afford, available. In addition, lower priced generic drugs are routinely given preferential formulary status (e.g., automatic coverage, preferred tiers, removal of prior authorization requirements) by third party prescription plans and pharmacy benefit managers: reducing insurance coverage barriers to obtaining these drugs and increasing utilization.

³⁵⁸ Regional Meetings November 2011, Generic Kadian Sales Team Training, ACTAVIS0335094.

³⁵⁹ “Others” could include, for example, patients who simply wish to pay cash for their prescription opioid and not work through their prescription insurance.

177. Finally, generic companies may increase the supply of opioids in the marketplace through their manufacturing of additional doses of opioids. For example, from about 1999 through about 2015 during which time Defendants requested³⁶⁰ and were approved to manufacture more opioids.³⁶¹

Defendants' Generic Marketing

178. The Defendants' marketing of brand-name opioids effectively increased the size of the prescription opioid market. This made potential sales of generic opioids more attractive to generic manufacturers considering market entry, some of which also sold brand-name opioids. Generic companies focus on, understanding the market, production (including quality) and manipulating "price," and drug availability to optimize their portfolios and maximize profits.³⁶²

179. Entry into any generic market is ultimately based on the potential for drug sales and profitability. When considering entry into a generic opioid market, the prototypical "go-no-go" market decision, generic manufacturers considered key factors, such as:³⁶³

- Awareness of the marketing associated with the branded drugs which increased the demand for these drugs, making the category more attractive from a sales potential. In fact, in some cases generics were being sold to replace a branded drug by the same manufacturer.
- The nature of the drugs, e.g., efficacy, black box warnings, the side effects, their addictive and abuse potential.
- A more complex and therefore more expensive distribution process in the supply chain at the wholesale and retail levels due to the Schedule II, narcotic status.
- The need to continually reevaluate market entry as dynamics (e.g., prices, competition, regulations, market demand, product perceptions) change. This factor is most important after entry when a company decides to stay in each market. This factor certainly suggests that the generic Defendants would have periodically reevaluated all market dynamics, including the national attention focused on abuse, addiction, and death from opioids.

180. Generic marketers thoroughly analyze the market prior to entry to ensure profits and a fit between the company and markets selected for entry. The “go” decision, based on detailed analysis of all salient market entry criteria implies these manufacturers possessed and viewed favorably, information on the market dynamics, positive and negative consequences (e.g., dependence, abuse, diversion and addiction) related to their decisions. The marketing analysis of the go-no-go decision and marketing plans cited in this Report support this proposition.³⁶⁴
181. Yet, each generic manufacturer still decided to enter the opioid market based on potential sales and profitability, otherwise the decision would have been “no-go.” From a marketing and business perspective, for each generic manufacturer who decided to enter opioid market, the profit potential outweighed any barriers or potential negative aspects of market entry, including concerns over the risks of selling opioids. Generic opioid manufacturers entered the market with a focus on harnessing the potential for profits based on high demand for opioids created by the aggressive marketing of brand-name opioids.

182. Finally, generic manufacturers also potentiated the opioid epidemic by providing a lower cost alternative to the more expensive branded opioids. Lower priced opioids meant greater access for most insurance plans since generics are usually covered in preferential tiers, and for cash paying customers. Greater access due to price implies increased use of opioids further expanding the market. This benefit to cash paying patients is also important because cash payments by patients are considered a clue to potential drug abuse and diversion.³⁶⁵

H. Wholesale Distributors and Defendants' Marketing

183. The place variable of the 4Ps of the marketing mix identifies the need for products to be efficiently distributed to customers; getting the right products to the right place at the right time.³⁶⁶ In the pharmaceutical industry, the distribution function is provided by pharmaceutical wholesale distributors, and pharmacy chains who provide all or part of the wholesale distribution function through their own vertically integrated wholesale distribution divisions.³⁶⁷
184. In Section II of this Report, the roles of the stakeholders and revenue flows in the integrated supply chain are described. (Figure 4.) As the U.S. drug distribution system currently exists, pharmaceutical manufacturers could not ensure the distribution of their products without both ³⁶⁵ The level of cash payments for prescription opioids is used by wholesalers and drug enforcement personnel as an indicator of potential abuse. However, cash payments must be considered along with data on employment, insurance coverage, and formulary considerations. When a pharmacy has a high proportion of cash payments for opioids it can spark increased scrutiny or investigation.

³⁶⁶ Generally, getting the product there at the right price is also necessary, reflecting the interrelatedness of the 4Ps.

³⁶⁷ Large pharmacy chains who provide wholesale distribution services for their outlets generally also employ a "backup" wholesaler to provide distribution services for medications to ensure product availability.

wholesale distributors and pharmacy providers. Therefore, wholesale distributors and pharmacies are integral to the Defendants' marketing of opioids.

185. The Defendants' marketing messages distributed by the wholesalers focused generally on price, availability, and other features of interest to pharmacy and other buyers.³⁶⁸ For example, Actavis, in a joint marketing program with McKesson, engaged in an Online and Phone Awareness Campaign for Oxymorphone described as:

*"McKesson's team of dedicated generics specialists, GenericsConnect, will be contacting a targeted pool of 200 retail independent pharmacies with significant Opana ER brand sales beginning the week of September 26 [2011]. Each GenericsConnect Specialist has a regular series of ongoing conversations with the same customer base, and promotional awareness of Actavis' Oxymorphone is being incorporated into their outbound messaging during this campaign period."*³⁶⁹

Wholesalers also could include promotional messages in their marketing of manufacturers drugs to prescribers, in addition to the drug availability messages delivered to pharmacies.^{370 371 372 373}

For example, Actavis targeted the 10,000 top prescribing doctors of Opana ER for a two-wave direct mail and email campaign.³⁷⁴

186. Further, unbranded activities were also noted related to generic marketing, such as a 2014 and 2015 Teva unbranded initiative called “Pain Matters” which ran as a documentary on the Discovery Channel, on the internet, and at pain management conferences.³⁷⁵ Teva’s 2015 budget for the Pain Matters campaign was approximately $1 million, and Teva carefully tracked the results.³⁷⁶ The Pain Matters campaign focused on the use of opioids for chronic pain with messages such as: “At Teva Pharmaceuticals, we understand that chronic pain affects more than 100 million Americans. . . Prescription opioid medications are an important part of a treatment plan for people living with chronic pain.”³⁷⁷ Teva executives acknowledge that the Pain Matters campaign was a promotional program that was not tied to any of Teva’s branded opioids but, instead, was run while Teva was manufacturing and distributing generic opioids.³⁷⁸

187. Given the forms of generic marketing, including the essential function of drug distribution in the supply chain system, the increased sales of opioids resulting from Defendants’ marketing, could not have occurred without wholesale distributors and pharmacies which completed the supply chain system and made opioids available to patients.

IV. CONCLUSION

188. The aggressive marketing of opioids by Defendants, which included working closely with national level pain advocacy organizations and thought leaders in pain management, resulted in the creation of new medical thinking about pain and its treatment. This new thinking encouraged well-meaning physicians to prescribe more opioids, for more types of pain, sooner and for longer periods of time, without concern for possible harms. Defendants used numerous, time-tested pharmaceutical marketing techniques to target multiple Customers with carefully crafted, well-coordinated messages designed to overcome barriers related to opioid prescribing. Defendants’ marketing messages focused on three general themes:

- Addiction, dependence, tolerance, and withdrawal should not be a concern in prescribing opioids.
- Opioids are effective for, and improve functioning in, patients taking them for long-term and chronic use.
- Opioids should be first-line therapy for pain.

Confidential and Subject to Protective Order

189. Using these general themes, Defendants used a battery of specific marketing messages designed to increase product awareness and systematically remove existing barriers: effectively changing how Customers viewed opioids. Other experts evaluated the nature of these messages and provided the opinions that Defendants' marketing messages were false, misleading, inaccurate, or designed to misstate the risks and benefits of Defendants' drugs. Defendants also downplayed the negative aspects of their products and convinced prescribers, and others, to use opioids sooner in treating pain, at higher doses, and for a broader spectrum of pain types.
190. Further, Defendants' marketing activities with influencers, KOLs, and professional/advocacy organizations gave their messages more credibility because Defendants hid their funding and influence from the medical community and the public. This created the perception that the information from these marketing efforts was unbiased and more scientific which mislead Customers about the impartiality of the messages.
191. The marketing strategies and tactics Defendants used were effective at gaining market share and expanding the overall market for opioids. This led to a dramatic rise in utilization of opioids in the U.S.
192. Defendants violated marketing standards by creating and disseminating false or misleading marketing messages that downplayed or minimized the risks associated with opioids, while emphasizing the benefits of their drugs, and by disguising their support of activities aimed at increasing sales of their own products.

Schedule 9: Manufacturing Defendant Testimony that Marketing Plans were National

Allergan Deponent	Deposition Cite	Deposition Testimony Excerpt
Julie Snyder, 30(b)(6) designee	271:5-24; 272:1-3	Q: In terms of the marketing materials that were provided to sales representatives to market Kadian, were any of those regionally specific? A: None of the ones I saw were regionally specific. They were all—they were all national—the same materials that were used nationally. Q. So to the best of your knowledge, all of the marketing materials concerning Kadian that were provided to sales reps were used by sales reps across the country? A. Yes, that's my understanding. There was one contract I reviewed with MetaMedia, they provided some managed care data where I believe sales representatives could pull up coverage specific to an area and provide that to physicians. So that would be the only exception that I could think of that would fall into that category.
John Hassler, 30(b)(6) designee	275:22-276:20	Q. Okay. These pieces, I think you -- excuse me. All of these marketing, sales, advertising pieces that are in VIVA that we're showing are national in scope? In other words, they are able to be used all over America; is that right? A. Yes. Q. So, in other words -- strike that. And I also -- my understanding is that the company, Teva, as well as Cephalon, and Actavis for that matter, did not track where each marketing piece was being used, correct? A. Yes. Q. Is that correct? A. Yes. Q. So, for example, if we had on here an approved piece during a period of time, a marketing piece, the company couldn't say, for example, well, that piece wasn't used in Ohio, for example, correct? MS. HILLYER: Objection to form. BY MR. CARTMELL: Q. Because they don't track that info? A. That's true.
Hassler, 30(b)(6) designee	283:16-23	Q. And just like Teva and Cephalon, the Actavis entities did not track these marketing, sales, advertising materials as far as the venues or geographic locations where they were used, correct? A. That's my understanding, yes.

Endo Deponent	Deposition Cite	Deposition Testimony Excerpt
Ronald Perry Wickline	196:3-8; 197:6-25	Q: we talked about that there was a national sales force at Endo eventually, correct? A: Once again, it was divided by specialty and pharma. Q: But it was nationwide? A: Both of them were nationwide. ... Q: But the point being that the sales reps were not deciding what messages to deliver to doctors? A: Oh, no, no, not at all. Q: Okay. And that was with respect to messages concerning the benefits of a product? They couldn't decide which benefits to message? A: They couldn't decide any that was, you know --- they had a sales promotional material that had been created by the marketing group and approved by our legal/regulatory group, but they wouldn't make any changes in the messaging. They could only use those approved materials. Q: All right. And the -- and the sales promotional materials that they used, were those used nationwide uniformly? A: Yes, they were.
Ronald Perry Wickline, VP Sales (2003-2007)	196:3-198:07	Q: we talked about that there was a national sales force at Endo eventually, correct? A: Once again, it was divided by specialty and pharma. Q: But it was nationwide? A: Both of them were nationwide. ... Q: But the point being that the sales reps were not
Ron Jackson, Endo Regional Business Director/VP Sales 30(b)(6)	186:21-187:10	Q. And did they -- did the brand team or the marketing team develop the brand strategy to be implemented nationwide for Opana ER, let's say? A. Yes. Q. Did they have any carve-outs that would say, well, this particular messaging we're not going to use in Ohio? A. Not that I recall. Q. Do you recall any particular promotional materials, with respect to Opana ER, that were not to be used in Ohio? A. I do not recall.

Ariyapadi Krishnaraj, November 28, 2018	273:2-10	Q. Okay. So sitting here today, talking about the process for distributing marketing communications throughout the United States with regard to Subsys, there's no campaign that you can point to and say that campaign was specifically directed at Washington? A. You know, in my gathering information for the deposition, I hadn't seen anything that was done specifically for any state.

Janssen Deponent	Deposition Cite	Deposition Testimony Excerpt
Kimberly Deem-Eshleman	55:9-15; 129:1-15	A: Our marketing and educational materials are distributed at a national level. There's -- there's only a few examples of where we specifically put things in the market, specific to any state. Those are access type of materials. (55:9-15) ... Q: Okay. And the process you had described, that -- is that how Janssen distributes its promotional materials nationally? A: Yes. Q: Does that process vary in Ohio? A: Not that I'm aware of. The only difference, as we talked about before, where there are materials specific to states is around access. So think about the managed care plans that are specific to each state. Those materials would only be distributed to those specific states." (129:1-15).

Mallinckrodt Deponent	Deposition Cite	Deposition Testimony Excerpt
Kevin Vorderstrasse	269: 19-24 270: 1-13	Q: "Is any of that broken down by region or state?" A: "No" Q: " So everything is just kind of nationally this is what we're doing? You're not doing a different marketing plan for a region, for example?" A: "No, All of our efforts were national level."
Kevin Webb 30(b)(6)	36:14-37:7	Q. Okay. Now, when Mallinckrodt developed marketing and advertising materials, this was on a national basis, was it not?  A: Yes. Q. Okay. So Mallinckrodt would not have developed special ads for a specific state? For example, they would not have developed Ohio-specific advertising, would they have?  A: Correct, we would not.
Michael Wessler	71:2-18	Q. While you were at Mallinckrodt, was the marketing messaging the same nationwide? A. Yes, meaning -- can I clarify that? Q. Absolutely, please do. A. So meaning did we use the same marketing message regardless of state or geography? Q. Yes, sir. A. Yes, that's my understanding and recollection. Q. Okay. So the marketing messaging that was used, let's say, in Ohio was the same as the messaging used in California, for example? A. Yes.

Ronald Perry Wickline	75:12-76:25	Q. Was the sales messaging the same for the entire country? A. Yes. Q. So the messaging that a sales representative in Ohio would be given is the same as the sales representative in Alaska? A. Yeah. When you say "sales message," as it relates to the product -- Q. Yes, sir. A. -- the message would have been the same. As it relates to payor information, it certainly probably was different. Q. In terms of the risks and benefits of a particular product, the sales messaging is the same regardless of the physical location? A. That would have been the same. And, you know, once again, all the sales materials were provided to representatives nationally that had all of the standard, you know, legal approvals that I described earlier. Q. Okay. So the sales messaging for a product in Tennessee or Ohio or California or Alaska, they were all the same? A. Correct. I mean, to the best of our ability to monitor that. Q. What do you mean by that? A. Well, in one place somebody may have put more emphasis on some aspects of the message that they were more comfortable with or thought it was, you know, more important to that customer. Our customers might have been slightly different, so -- Q. That was in the discretion of the salesperson? A. That would have been at the discretion of the salesperson but still using the approved promotional materials. Q. And the approved promotional materials were the same throughout the country? A. Correct.
Deanna Stacy Ayers Chick	205:3-206:6	Q. Okay. At any point in your tenure, did Tennessee itself have a specific sales tactic? Did you -- I'm gonna start over. At any point in your tenure, was there any sort of different message that was given to physicians or pharmacies in Tennessee versus other states? A. It was not our practice to distinguish sales messages by state or geography, necessarily. I don't recall anything similar to that. Q. Okay. Can you recall any time that a message would have deviated for geography purposes? A. The only specificity would be with respect to payer coverage in a geography. That would, in my mind, be the only reason for it to be different. Q. Okay. And, so, when you're talking about payer coverage, that would be who's paying for the product; is that correct? A. It would be the insurance coverage either through an insurer or pharmacy benefit manager, yeah. Q. And, so, could that also be some sort of a state-run program, like TennCare, for example? A. Yes.

Purdue Deponent	Deposition Cite	Deposition Testimony Excerpt
Phil Cramer (30)(b)(6)	Cramer 170:10-25; 171-1-10	A: So there's generally -- I would say generally the same material was used nationwide for promotion of a product. Q. But you didn't have individual regions, for example, using materials that had not been approved at the national level, even if there was something that was being used on a regional basis, that was something that was approved at the home office level, right? A. All material -- and this was consistent or is consistent, all material had to come from the home office and be approved from the home office. Q. And the sales representatives were instructed and trained that they were supposed to convey the same sales and marketing messages regardless of what part of the country they were in, correct? A. I would say -- I would say that's, yeah, accurate.
Phil Cramer (30)(b)(6)	Cramer 573-574: 6-23	Q. "You don't have a special -- you don't have special training for people that salespeople that operate in particular counties?" A. "Yeah. so as I indicated, we did on one point. And as you stated earlier, unfortunately the scope of abuse, diversion, misuse became a national issue. And so we take the same approach across the country and use essentially the same materials, except for situations like we have supported prescription monitoring programs in specific states."
Sally Riddle	49: 1-8 50: 1-25; 51: 1-3	Q: "Can you help maybe explain to the jury what is the difference between the sales department and the marketing department?" A: "The Sales department is largely field-based, other than national sales managers or vice president, that do the actual calls on physicians and other healthcare professionals as designated. Marketing department works to provide materials to the sales force that fit the indications of the products, according to the package insert, follow all of the FDA guidelines, as well as providing marketing information to other internal departments within the company and providing commercial input to clinical development regarding products and development." Q: " Okay. Now, Before we get to that, would it be fair to say that the sales and marketing materials and the sales and marketing practices that were followed by Purdue during -- throughout the period of time that you were working there, from when you first started as a -- as a sales representative until 2005, they were developed by the home office on a national basis; correct? " A: "yes" Q: "And they were complied with consistently on a national basis; correct? " A: "yes" Q: And, as you sit here today, you don't have any reason to believe that the sales and marketing practices engaged in by Purdue employees differed from one part of the country to the other. Is that fair? A: "Sales and marketing practices, as far as materials used and messages given, probably not. As far as individual focuses would vary by territory as far as which specialties you'd be calling on and what percentage. Every territory was unique. Every district was unique."

PPLPMDL080000001	BARBERTON	OH	44203	2/21/1995	INHALERS FOR ACUTE EPISODES OF ASTHMA BUT FEELS UNCOMFORTABLE WITH THEO. USED THE MARTIN STUDY TO SHOW THE BENEFITS OF UNI AND THE CONTIN DELIVERY SYSTEM PIECE. DR. WAS WILLING TO TRY TO USE UNI ONCE A DAY AT DINNER TO SEE IF PATIENTS BENEFIT.
PPLPMDL080000001	SAGAMORE HILLS	OH	44067	2/21/1995	ER CALL/BETADINE
PPLPMDL080000001	AKRON	OH	44319	2/21/1995	USING THE PATCH BECAUSE OF EASE OF ADMIN,BUT HE IS STILL USING ALOT OF BREAKTHROUGH MEDS. USED THE AHCPR GUIDELINES TO SHOW MORPHINE AS THE DRUG OF CHOICE AND DISCUSSED THE USE OF MSC AND WHICH ONE...DON'T REMEMBER IT...YES LEAVE THE CARD AND WILL TAKE SAMPLES..UNI PAPER GAIL PLEASE MAKE A PPT.. OK NOT TILL MAY
PPLPMDL080000001	SOLOH	OH	44139	2/21/1995	KIND OF CURT TODAY....BUSY ALOT OF SICK PEOPLE NO DHC AND NO-ONE IN PARTICULAR BIG WRITER....NO I TELL THEM TO CHANGE DIET BEFORE USINGA LAXITIVE WHY SHOULD USE SENOKOT...OK THEY CAN DECIDE
PPLPMDL080000001	SHAKER HTS.	OH	44122	2/21/1995	BIG WRITER OF UNI. 45% OF PATIENTS ON UNI. WRITES BID BECAUSE HIS POPULATION ARE FAST METABOLIZERS. USED THE NEW MARTIN STUDY TO SHOW THE ANTI-INFL EFFECT OF UNI AND HE FELT IT HAD MERIT,BUT FEELS MORE COMFORTABLE WITH INHALERS.
PPLPMDL080000001	BEACHWOOD	OH	44122	2/21/1995	BRENTWOOD BRANCH....GOING TO ST LUKE'S TODAY...MAKE YOU AWARE THAT THEY ARE PROBABLY USING MSC/ORAMORPH INTERCHANE ABLY...STILL ORDER ONE STRENGTH OF OURS... DR DOESN'T SEEM TO WANT TO GET INVOLVED...TRY DR QUAM AT HOSPITAL THIS AFTERNOON...NO SENOKOT ONLY HER 1 DAY/WEEK
PPLPMDL080000001	CLEVELAND HTS	OH	44118	2/21/1995	DR IS REALLY USING A LOT MORE CII'S DOESN'T THINK THAT MUCH BUT EITHER HAVE THE PT OR NOT I'D CHANGE HIM FROM DHC TO MSC. WHY DILAUDID OVER MSC...MORPHINE...I HAVE A FEELING THAT IT IS THE DREADCED MORPHINE PHOBIA
PPLPMDL080000001	BARBERTON	OH	44203	2/21/1995	STILL WRITES MORE PATCH FOR CONVIENCE THAN PRACTICE USE. STABLE PAIN IS THE INDICATION FOR PATCH USE.SHE FEELS ELDERLY PATIENTS DONT GET CONFUSED WITH THE PATCH AND COMPLIANCE IS BETTER. SHE IS STILL USING VICODIN FOR INCIDENT PAIN,SO WHY NOT MSC?
PPLPMDL080000001	EUCLID	OH	44119	2/21/1995	SAMPLES
PPLPMDL080000001	BARBERTON	OH	44203	2/21/1995	LIKES THE INHALERS BECAUSE THEY WORK INSTANTLY, TAKING LEVELS AND MONITORING SIDEFFECTS IS A BIG HASSEL. I MENTIONED THE DIFF IN THEO PREPARATIONS AND WHY UNI IS BETTER. USED THE NEW MARTIN STUDY AND HELMISIDE EFFECTS) TO SHOW SUPERIORITY.
PPLPMDL080000001	SAGAMORE HILLS	OH	44067	2/21/1995	I TRY NOT TO USE ANY CII IF I DON'T HAVE TO... IN THE INSTANCE THAT YOU NEED TO...ADDRESSED NARCOTIC USE ...OK I WILL GIVE THIS ONE A SHOT...SIGNED FOR SARIDAKIS
PPLPMDL080000001	BARBERTON	OH	44203	2/21/1995	HAS A PATIENT ON UNI, FROM THE OLD SCHOOL WHERE ALL SHE USED WAS THEO PRODUCTS. DISCUSSED THE DELIVERY SYSTEMS AND WHY UNI IS BETTER. USED THE HELM STUDY AND MARTIN TO SHOW THE MANY BENEFITS OF THEO. SERVED DOCTOR LUNCH ALONG WITH STAFF. WANTED SKT-S SAMPLES ALONG WITH MSC INFO. HAS A PATCH PATIENT AND WE WENT OVER MSC AND WHY IT IS BETTER.
PPLPMDL080000001	SOLOH	OH	44139	2/21/1995	BAD MOOD...DON'T TELL ME OR ASK...DON'T YOU REALIZE I DON'T DETERMINE WHAT TO DO...INSURANCE DOES HAVE USED IT WITH GOOD RESULTS...MAY GO OUT OF BUSINESS CARRIERS DROPPING ME!!!!
PPLPMDL080000001	SOLOH	OH	44139	2/21/1995	EXPERIENCES WITH ORAMORPH...HONESTLY SEEMS THE SAME ON ALL CII'S SOME ORAMORPH AND SOME MSC...MAKE YOU AWARE THEY ARE NOT INTERCHANGEABLE YES YES WE'VE BEEN THRU THIS THANK YOU...NT STILL ORDER OUR 15 AND OCCASIONAL 30 OR 60 FOR FEW DOLLARS/YEAR WHY NTO JUST SWITCH BACK... WHY TAKE CHANCE OF PUTTING PT ON THAT ROLLERCOASTER

PPLPMDL080000001	CLEVELAND	OH	44111	5/8/1995	COMPLETE JERK-"YOU NEED A NEW DRUG"-HE'S NOT USING THEO ANYMORE EXCEPT FOR REAL SEVERE ASTHMA.USING B2'S,SEREV, AND REP OR VOLMAX-NOT EVEN AS MANY STEROIDS.DOESN'T GO BY LEVELS TOLD ME HE NEVER SEES REPS BUT AGREED TO SEE ME TODAY BUT NEVER AGAIN.NO SAMPLES.DOESN'T LIKE DR. SCHWARTZ.WOULD NEVER WRITE WHAT HE WRITES.HE'S "BOARD CERTIFIED." BIG DEAL.

PPLPMDL080000001	MIDDLEBURG HTS.	OH	44130	5/8/1995	USES UNI PROBABLY MORE SLO-BID AND UNI GREAT CONCEPT GOO EXCEPT IN THE TOUGH CASES RATHER MORE FREQUENT DOSING... RAPID METABOLIZERS...HAS USED UNI MANY TIME BID. NT ... DR I KNOW YOU USE A GREAT DEAL OF UNI AND YOU MENTIO THAT WITH YOUR RAPID METABOLIZERS YOU'D RATHER DOSE BID BUT WITH THE BID PRODUCTS DO YOU EVER NEED TID AND WHAT DO U
PPLPMDL080000001	CLEVELAND	OH	44107	5/8/1995	HAS USED SOME IN PAST-FORGOT ABOUT IT WILL TRY AGAIN.
PPLPMDL080000001	MIDDLEBURG HEIGHTS	OH	44130	5/8/1995	APPRECIATE YOUR UPDATES LATER THIS MONTH FOR TEAM APPT
PPLPMDL080000001	MIDDLEBURG HEIGHTS	OH	44130	5/8/1995	DOSING CONVERSIONS, MSIR , 200MG, AHCPR, BOWEL MANAGEMENT. EASE OF TITRATION...GOOD REFRESHER AND SURE THE NURSES APPRECIATED IT. NO VCR SO I WILL LEAVE A TAPE FOR THEM TO TAKE HOME AND USE WITH PTS...COMFORT ASSESS JOURNALS WILL BE TAKING THE TRIP THIS MONTH INSTEAD. USED MSIR CAPSULE...WHAT DO YOU THINK ABOUT USING IN-HOUSE?
PPLPMDL080000001	CLEVELAND	OH	44122	5/9/1995	MSC 200MG AND ORANGE CARD...NOT THE SAME...BAD DAY JUST FIRST WEEK BACK AND FRAZZLED...APPT IN A FEW WEEKS OK CAN I JUST LEAVE THIS...FOLLOW IT BC AND ORANGE CARD PI,

PPLPMDL0080000001	CLEVELAND	OH	44119	7/11/1995	TOLD ME I WAS DOING LUNCH NX WK AND HE WAS HAPPY.SD HAS PT ON 120 BID (BIG DEAL)
PPLPMDL0080000001	CLEVELAND	OH	44113	7/13/1995	HAS USED SOME WITH GOOD RESULTS-WILL TRY AGAIN

PPLPMDL080000001	CLEVELAND	OH	44113	7/13/1995	DID MSC INSERVICE FOR PAIN MANAGEMENT CENTER-VERY GOOD DIS- CUSSION-USING MSC WHENEVER HE CAN.GREAT RESULTS SO FAR. EXTREMELY GRATEFUL FOR LUNCH-TELLING OTHER DOCS ABOUT MSC ALSO
PPLPMDL080000001	CLEVELAND	OH	44113	7/13/1995	SAW DONNA-TRIED TO GET TIME TO COME TO TEAM MTG-SD I'LL HAVE TO CALL HER
PPLPMDL080000001	CLEVELAND	OH	44113	7/13/1995	SAME OLD THING
PPLPMDL080000001	CLEVELAND	OH	44113	7/13/1995	SAME AS DR. JOSHI--DID INSERVICE-REALLY HAPPY WITH RESULTS GETTING FROM MSC--HAVE SEVERAL PTS ON IT-SAW ONE TODAY ON 60 MG TID.
PPLPMDL080000001	CLEVELAND	OH	44113	7/13/1995	SAME AS JOSHI AND SALTZ
PPLPMDL080000001	CLEVELAND	OH	44114	7/13/1995	STRANGE MOOD TODAY--UNI #1 THEO--DOESN'T LIKE TO TALK ABOUT IT-SAYS IT'S BORING TOPIC-HE USES IT.DHC--HERE AND THERE- HAS HAD SOME GOOD LUCK WITH IT AND SOME BAD LUCK WITH IT.
PPLPMDL080000001	CLEVELAND	OH	44113	7/13/1995	STILL USING QUITE A BIT-TRYING TO GET EVERYONE OFF DURA AND ONTO MSC--ROMAN REALLY HELPING.
PPLPMDL080000001	RICHMOND HTS	OH	44143	7/14/1995	REAL BUSY BUT SD MSC WORKED WELL ON THE PTS HE HAS TRIED IT ON EXCEPT 1.HASN'T USED SINCE THEN.SAYS WON'T GO TO HIGH DOSE-I THINK HE'S STILL GUNSHY OF IT.AFRAID OF BAD SE AND RESP DEP.LIKES 15MG MOST.ND TO GET MORE TIME WITH HIM
PPLPMDL080000001	SOUTH EUCLID	OH	44121	7/14/1995	STILL SAYS ITS THE ONLY THEO HE USES.HAS REALLY CHANGED. USING A LOT MORE OF IT LATELY
PPLPMDL080000001	EUCLID	OH	44119	7/14/1995	SHOWED NEW A1A SUMMARY-REALLY INTERESTED IN IT-DISCUSSED B2 SECTION A LITTLE BIT-SD HE ONLY USES ORAL FOR CERTAIN PTS-ESP ONES THAT CAN'T SEEM TO TOLERATE THEO-OR MILD ASTHMATICS THAT ND SOMETHING FOR NIGHT-DOESN'T OVERUSE THEM. TRIED TO GET THESE PTS TO UNI-SD MAYBE.ADDRESS AGAIN NX
PPLPMDL080000001	RICHMOND HTS	OH	44143	7/14/1995	USES IT CORRECTLY AND ALL THE TIME-WHAT MORE CAN I SAY? DOES TRY AND SWITCH SOME PTS.VERY RECEPTIVE-LOVES UNI
PPLPMDL080000001	EUCLID	OH	44132	7/17/1995	REAL QUICK IN HOSPITAL--NOT MANY PTS RIGHT NOW--ONC CENTER IS NOT DOING REAL WELL.HAS PTS ON MSC-BUT STILL WON'T TELL ME WHY HE USES DURA.TELLS ME WHAT I WANT TO HEAR.
PPLPMDL080000001	EUCLID	OH	44117	7/17/1995	NO CA PTS RIGHT NOW.
PPLPMDL080000001	EUCLID	OH	44119	7/17/1995	DID LUNCH--VERY NICE TODAY--SD ONLY HAS 1 PT ON ORAMORPH THAT HAS BEEN ON IT FOR 2 YRS.SHWD NEW VISUAL-SD YES THAT'S WHY.STILL USING A LOT OF DURA BUT WE DISCUSSED A LITTLE MORE THE BENEFITS OF MSC.WHO, ETC.AGRED.HOSPICE HAS BEEN WORKING ON HER.
PPLPMDL080000001	CLEVELAND	OH	44119	7/17/1995	DID LUNCH--TOO AMIABLE--HAS PT ON 120 BID RIGHT NOW-THAT'S AS HIGH AS HE HAS HAD TO GO--WHY?JUST HASN'T HAD THE PTS. SAYS MSC IS "FLOWING" IN HIS PRACTICE.!!! YEA RIGHT.
PPLPMDL080000001	CLEVELAND	OH	44127	7/18/1995	USING A LOT OF PROV AND VOLMAX--SHWD BARNES AND NEW A1A- ASKED HER TO USE UNI ON SOME PTS INSTEAD--SHE SD OK SHE WOULD TRY!!
